The officials said the crisis began when Boris N. Yeltsin, a nonvoting member of the Politburo and head of the powerful Moscow party or-ganization, broke with Mr. Gorba-chev on Oct. 21 in a dramatic, unscheduled speech at a full Central committee meeting.

Mr. Yeltsin, who has been a passionate advocate of Mr. Gorbachev's effort to reshape Soviet society, stunned the Central Committee by charging that Mr. Gorbachev was developing a cult of personality that threatened to understook by programs, the officials dermine his programs, the officials reported. They said that Mr. Yeltsin told the committee members that he was resigning from his Moscow party post, frustrated by the slow pace of change in the capital re-gion. He withdrew the threat sever-al days later and will keep his joh at least until after the 70th anniversary of the revolution on Nov. 7, one official said Thursday.

Mr. Yeltsin also criticized the party's number two leader. Yegor K. Ligachev, saying nº lacken cor passion, according to the officials.

China to Reduce Planning and Add Zones

By Daniel Southerland

Washington Post Sernee
BEIJING — China's reformist leaders announced on Thursday that they would reduce Soviet-style central planning and forcefully expand the nation's opening to the outside world by creating new special economic zones. The announcements gave a clear signal that the reformists have won a battle over conserva-Prime Minister Zhao Ziyang declared that in two to three years, only about 30 percent of the country's economy will be controlled through central planning, the official Xinhua news agency said. Experts said that this was the first time any top Chinese leader had given such a specific target for reductions in central planning.

Xinhua said Mr. Zhao made the disclosure in a meeting Thursday with Arthur Dunkel, director general of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. Ching has applied to join the GATT but its application has been hindered by its continuing barriers to free trade.

Mr. Zhao told Mr. Dunkel that nine years ago, China's economy was 100 percent planned. The prime minister estimated that it is now 50 percent under central planning.

In a separate report, Xinhua said that certain foreign enterprises and joint ventures which produce technically advanced products will be allowed to sell part of their production on China's domestic market. This move is seen as part of an effort to make China more attractive to high-technology investors.

At a press conference, meanwhile, Gu Mu, a state councillor, said that Hainan island, off the coast far to the south, will become a special economie zone. It will serve as a laboratory for experiments with several forms of international trade and investment which China so far has avoided, including unrestricted sales of land on the island and other elements of a capitalist

The ownership of land is a sensitive issue in Communist countries. Officials insist that land throughout China is still state-owned, despite the fact that peasants now have the use of their land for up to 15-year periods.

Mr. Gu said that a proposal has been made to turn two large peninsulas in the north — the Liaoning and Shandong peninsulas — into ar-eas more open to foreign trade and investment. His press conference was held in connection with the ongoing Communist Party congress. It gave a clear signal that reformist leaders have won a hattle over "conservative" leaders who have wanted to limit the expansion of special economic zones. The existing four zones offer tax breaks and less government interference to foreign investors. The four — Shenzhen, Zhuhai, Xiameo and Shantou — lie on China's southeast coast. All have had problems. Hainan, an undeveloped tropical island slightly smaller than Taiwan, would become by far the largest of the special zones.

On the political front, Mr. Gu indicated that he had been persuaded that Deng Xiaoping, China's senior leader, should step down from the party's ruling Polithuro — a strong indica-tion that Mr. Deng will indeed step down.

Mr. Gu. almost certainly, would not have made this statement unless he was fairly sure that he was conforming both to the party consensus and to Mr. Deng's wishes. Senate Clears Airline-Smoking Curb

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate gave preliminary approval
Thursday to a ban on cigarette smoking on domestic airline flights scheduled to last 90 minutes or less. The prohibition would cover more than half of all U.S. routes for an initial two-year period.

The wording of the prohibition is a change from the original version which would have affected flights of up to two hours and lasted for three years. But those terms were opposed by senators from southern tobacco-growing states, and the new wording was reached after several hours of closed negotiations.

More than 30 health and consumer groups, joined by unions representing flight attendants, have lobbied for the measure. On the other side, the tobacco and airline industries, joined by the airline pilots' union, want to block it. The pilots believe that with a ban in effect, smokers would light up secretly in airliner bathrooms, where there is a high risk of fire.

Earlier, Mr. Wright had said passage of the bill by the Democratcontrolled body would enhance prospects of reaching agreement with the White House on a complete plan of deficit cuts. But Republican leaders had insisted that a vote to raise taxes, even while congressional and White House negotiators were meeting, could torpedo that effort.

Undiplomatic Attitudes at State Dept. Cut Things, Not People, Budget-Beset Employees Urge cables and corridor conversations northern Virginia, reptacing its

By John M. Goshko Wathington Post Service
WASHINGTON — The State Department's plan to cope with budget restrictions by eliminating about 1,270 jobs has sent morale plummeting and is causing angry demands from department employees that the Reagan administration "cut things, not people." This has been the most frequently heard phrase 21 the department since early this month, when details unfolded as to how the department intends to absorb an $84 million shortfall in the operating budget that it expects to receive from Congress for fiscal 1988.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz announced Sept. 18 that considerable belt-tightening would be required, but he was vague and did not say that large-scale firings and forced retirements were being

According to department offi-cials, the realization that the State Department plans to eliminate about 8 percent of its 15,800 Foreign Service and Civil Service persomel has caused the biggest hlow to morale since the late 1940s and early 1950s, when many of its employees were targets of anti-com-

In a recent cable to embassies, Ronald I. Spiers, undersecretary of state for management, sought to address that point, noting that the department has dealt with shrinking appropriations since 1986 by reducing expenditures for things such as equipment, supplies and vehicles." But, he added, "We have reached a point where such 'thinning-the-soup measures' will no longer suffice."

Such explanations have not stilled complaints that many expensive programs and equipment acquisitions have been spared from cuts because they are pet projects of Congress or of the department's

Among rank-and-file diplomats and other employees, there seems to be almost universal agreement that if the department wants to make meaningful budget cuts, it should postpone plans for improving security at overseas embassies through a massive rebuilding program, erecting a new campus for the Foreign Service Institute in

Fueling this attitude is anger over what many employees believe was the excessive secrecy and lack of consultation with which the master plan for cutbacks was drafted under the guidance of Deputy Secretary John C. Whitehead and three other senior department offi-

The result, as a senior official said privately, "was about what you would expect from a group of accountants and systems analysts who are adept at numbers crunching but who don't understand the realities of what the State Department is supposed to do and what it needs and doesn't need to do it."

"Most people here are so fed up with being kicked around that if the department were to make its planned early-retirement offer available to everyone, almost the entire building would be disposed to accept," said Evangeline Monroe, vice president of the American Foreign Service Association.

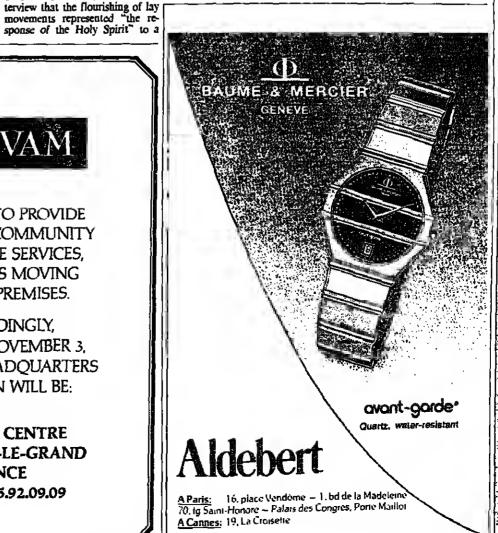

"But," she added, "when people stop and think, they realize that even that isn't an agrecable way out, because in most cases the annuity isn't enough to live on."

too. Why tighten up just when the stock market is in shock and the economy may be on the brink of recession?

Yet a broad sweep of respected conservative and liberal economists, plus President Reagan, Democratic and Republican leaders of Congress, a phalanx of foreign leaders and many businessmen believe the deed must be done. While they are divided over whether to raise taxes, they agree that the deficit has to come down, by at least $23 billion. Not one would say that this would make everything all right. It is still the right place to start.

Taming the budget is only one of several immediate steps to be taken, all linked. Tighter budgets must be matched by the Federal Reserve loosening reins on credit. That is how to maintain aggregate demand and minimize chances of recession. Further, this American policy must be matched by stronger growth policies in the powerhouse economies of West Germany and Japan. And all must pay careful atten-tion to the value of the dollar.

There is no magic in a $23 billion deficit reduction. It is the target mandated for fiscal 1988 in the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings balanced-budget law. Some experts now question whether that is enough. But given concerus about recession it is probably wise to stick with a modest cutback now, coupled with assurance of further reductions to come. A more resounding challenge to policy

Critics, right and left, insist that it is wrong to cut the U.S. budget deficit now. Non-experts are entitled to wonder, factors. What is most needed at this time of enormous uncertainty is stability. A $23 billion cut is large enough to reassure the ficancial world but not so large as to feed a recession. The resulting slack in demand can be made up by easier credit and stronger exports, foreign governments willing.

It is also critical that the deficit be reduced by agreement rather than arbitrary Gramm-Rudman-Hollings cuts or a mindless across-the-board spending freeze. Those strategies hit poor people hardest, Moreover, failure to negotiate agreement would say that Washington remains to pa-ralysis, even after the Wall Street collapse; that is how to rattle the markets more.

As the White House and congressional leaders tackle these questions, one danger is gimmick solutions. Two examples: The pending budget legislation in the Senate pretends to save almost $1 billion by altered bookkeeping — no ehange in spending—for the Tongass National For-est in Alaska. A House bill pretends to find new revenue by making corporations pay taxes more quickly. Such transparent manipulation feeds suspicion that Washington will never make hard choices.

For the moment, the budget negotiators appear to be on track. A watchful world can withhold judgment until the job is accomplished, honestly and quickly. - THE NEW YORK TIMES.

The Case for a Gas Tax

If President Reagan and Congress cannot cut the budget deficit by more than the $23 billion already assured, that will be a spectacular confession of political incompe-tence. The financial markets will read it that way, and an incompetent government is not a reassuring sight to investors already badly shaken by the drop in stock prices. But the job of managing the budget is not as hard as the negotiators have been making it.

The deficit has to come down, but that is not all. Throughout the economy Americans are consuming more than they can afford and saving too little. It is time to raise consumption taxes, and not just on beer.

The case for a gasoline tax is stronger than ever. It not only would raise the revenues that the government desperately needs. It would put a useful restraint on the rate at which the United States is burning oil. Oil imports have been rising steadily for two years. With the world's chief source of imported oil threatened by an unending war to the Gulf, it is mindless simply to let American dependence keep drifting upward.

Each penny per gallon added to the gas tax would raise $1 billion a year. How about a 30-cent tax, phased to over three years? It would do wonders for the deficit. It would also do wonders for the atmosphere to the stock market. People there fear that even if the White House and Congress manage to produce a reduction in this year's deficit, it will be a patched-up list of one-shot gim-micks and nifties like asset sales and accounting changes that promise only the most illusory improvement. A gasoline tax scheduled to rise over time would, in contrast, be a solid promise of real, permanent progress.

The antitax theorists and supply-siders, as one would expect, have begun to remind a nervous Congress that attempts to balance the budget to the early 1930s made the Depression much worse. There are a couple of night-and-day differences be-tween then and now. The U.S. economy, and the world's, was already several mooths into a recession when the stock market crashed in 1929. Now, in contrast, the economy is expanding rapidly. In the 1930s, the Federal Reserve Board mistakenly tightened the money supply and raised toterest rates, Currently, one crucial benefit of a lower deficit would be to provide the Federal Reserve greater latitude to lower interest rates. That will do more to avoid a recession than trying to persuade Wall Street that big deficits are good for it. The gas tax is too effective a remedy to ignore.

- THE WASHINGTON POST.

The Soviet Masses Awake

historic buildings in Moscow. Another calls for a nongovernmental seminar on buman rights. A third restores a monastery for use as a cultural center. Such is the diversity of groups mushrooming in the Soviet Union, where even to organize on behalf of the handicapped has long been impossible.

Mikhail Gorbachev rightly believes that he cannot have the economic reform his country desperately needs without public vitality and enthusiasm for change. But those attitudes do not come easily to a people so long pushed down, and his pleas have taken on an almost plaintive air. The new groups are the first hint that social and political planalism could begin to emerge from the gloom.

They nudge tentatively at the bound-aries, requesting the right to run candidates for government posts, toviting links with East European or Western peace groups. The Perestroika Club proposes a monument to the victims of Stalinism. A Federation of Socialist Clubs, reminiscent of America's New Left in the '60s, debates the future of Soviet society.

Inevitably, there are those who use their new freedoms to deny freedom to others and incite hatred. For example, the nationalist Pamyat is anti-Semitic and volubly opposes current reforms.

The groups are such a new phenomenon

thorities are groping for rules of behavior. So far, the government has tended toward the permissive, allowing the clubs to operate openly and even to call news conferences to explain their views.

Now a special commission is studying the groups to order to recommend an official stance. The commission was instigated by Tatiana Zaslavskaya, a leading advoeate of reform. An economist by profession, she has been uncommonly outspoken about the social problems facing reform. "Ours is a terribly toert system," she bas said, with a "eonspicuous and general tendency of passivity" that has reduced society to a "slumbering mass."

That inertia is natural enough, given decades of repression of intellectual dis-sent, denial of diversity and obsession with secrecy. Add fears about the impact of economic reforms on prices, incomes and job security, and the inhibitions on activism are clear. For all that, the independent clubs sprout with remarkable speed and vitality.

Is this the vanguard of the broader activism Mr. Gorbachev says he seeks? Can Soviet society accommodate the unruliness of such pturalism? The answers will say a lot about how far Mr. Gorbachev's openness and restructuring will go.

A Little Rationality, Please

As White House and congressional leaders sat down to negotiate deficit reductions, one Wall Streeter demanded that Washing-ton react immediately or "it will get awful." But it may take some time for Washington to take corrective action - and probably it should. The economic clouds in fact are towering thunderheads to every direction. Solutions will be complicated, long in taking hold and no doubt somewhat painful.

The budget deficit is just one slice of the problem. America needs to deal with a massive trade deficit that may be the most intractable piece of the puzzle. There is the threat of protectionist trade legislation, and the awful lurking problem of Third World debt. Wall Street, Congress and the administration also must act on internal market problems that have brought about considerable wretched excess and threatened to send Wall Street totally out of control

The New York Stock Exchange chairman. John Phelan, has highlighted the problem of using credit to buy stocks that must be dumped in a falling market when the stocks lose equity and loans are called, thus making the plunge even worse.

The crisis demands determination, rationality and unity from Washington, but not overreaction. From Wall Street, for now, a little rationality would do.

The Key to Moscow's Success in the Mideast

WASHINGTON - Thanks to aggressive diplomacy, the Soviet Union is emerging as a potential mediator and power broker in the Gulf war and the Arab-Israel conflict. The Soviets have not yet supplanted the United States in the role of Middle East peacemaker, but they have made important gains. The key to Moscow's diplomatic strategy is that, unlike Washington, it maintains contact with all sides, talking to Iran and Iraq, to Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization. I have watched the evolution of Soviet Middle East policy at close hand over the past three years.

During that time, former Assistant Secretary of State Harold Saunders and I have met regularly with high-level Soviet Mideast policy makers as part of the Dartmouth Group process of dialogue. During that time, we have seen a growing sophistication on the Soviet side - and an explicit recognition that the war in Afghanistan cannot be won. Starting about a year ago, the Soviets began to talk about playing a more aggressive diplomatic role in the Arab-Israel confrontation.

General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev has placed himself in an unprecedentedly powerful position in the Middle East. With regard to any future Arab Israeli peace negotiations, he clearly has recognized what Israel is beginning to — and what Washington has not at all — that no peace agreement, especially one containing territorial compromises for the Palestinians, can be negotiated and legitimized without the participation of representative Palestinians and, of course, a functioning Israeli government.

American policy, in contrast, is still driven by terrorism-fixation and remains unable to accept the fact that peace negotiations have to take place between enemies and not friends, and that nobody between enemies and not friends, and that notody can designate who shall represent the adversary. The Soviets recognize that the PLO is one of the choke points of any credible peace effort. At the April conference of the Palestine National Council to Algiers, where there was no U.S. presence, the Soviet ambassador was busy bringing radical groups back toto the PLO fold, thus strengthening Yasser Arafat's hand.

The PLO still matters in peace negotiations, for a simple reason. No peace agreement will, under even the most optimistic forecasts, get back everything that the Arabs lost in the war of 1967. No Arab state, not Jordan, not Syria, not even Egypt, is strong enough to accept hard-to-swallow compromises over territory deemed by the Arabs to be Palestinian. Only Palestinians can legitimize such a step. And they are in the PLO. All attempts by Israelis. Jordanians and Syrians to create substitutes for the PLO have totally failed.

tutes for the PLO have totally failed.

The Soviets, by their skillful move with the PLO, have placed themselves in a central position in Middle Eastern diplomacy from which they cannot easily be dislodged. The question still asked in Washington of whether "we should let the Russians in" now represents a train that has left the station. Even Secretary of State George Shultz seems to have recognized this by endorsing joint seems to have recognized this by endorsing joint U.S.-Soviet sponsorship of peace negotiations.

The Soviets' advocacy of an international conference to propel the peace process fits their general orientation. They know that Jordan is far too weak to come to the negotiating table alone and make a separate peace. The fate of Egypt's Anwar Sadat, who was far more powerful, is well remembered. Hence Moscow's strong and Washington's milder support for such a conference, in which conference to be little more than show, an umbrella to permit the Jordanians to enter. But then the umbreils would be folded and the actual negotiations would be bilateral between Israel and Jordan, and perhaps Israel and Syria, and all decisions would be final.

The Soviets laugh at such an idea. Yes, they are prepared to be flexible to form, to permit bilateral negotiations, to accept a joint Jordanian-Palestinian delegation whose Palestinian members would, of course, get their or-

The Crisis Is International, And So Are the Solutions

By Hobart Rowen

WASHINGTON — Yes, a significant cut is needed in the American budget deficit. But when Wall Street and other fragile markets tell political leaders all over the world to get to work, the message has a broader and deeper meaning.

It would be a mistake to think that a nod toward fiscal sanity will be enough to avoid the deep recession analysts think likely next year. There remain the critical issues of the trade deficit, exchange rate levels, the protectionist threat and the ugly overhang of $1 billion in Third World debt. At a dinner here Monday among liberal Democrats and members of the West German Social Democratic Party, Gina Despres, a top aide to Senator Bill Bradley, heard no disagreement when she said:

The problems and the solutions we face are toternational. America can't solve this crisis alone. Just cutting the American budget deficit won't help unless West Germany and Japan expand their economies. It will only cause recession.

"If you don't expand," she said to the Germans, "we will have a bitter protectionist reaction, and we will all go to hell in a handbasket."

Wolfgang Roth, the SPD's shadow economics minister and a member of the Bundestag, acknowledged that confidence must be restored to the ability of the major work together. He said that James Baker, the U.S. Treasury secretary, "was right to criticize the Kohl gov-ernment's high interest rate policy." Yet the markets are just as unsure whether West Germany will face up to its responsibilities as they are about Washington's ultimate response. What financial markets await from Washington is a fast and credible move to cut the budget deficit signifi-cantly, not just the $23 billion that would arise from the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings legislation.

Financial markets need the assurance of a deficit reduction of $40 billion to $50 billion to fiscal 1988.

That would offset the inflationary potential of the Federal Reserve's welcome steps to ease money. One senses that President Reagan is not sufficiently scared. He temporizes about a tax increase, arguing that oothing worse than a "correc-non" is taking place, and that the economy is pretty much all right.

But how about the Democrats? I do not hear the Democratic presidential candidates using the dreaded words "tax increase."

ing their protectionist mischief.

There is no reason to believe that the stock market turmoil of 1987 will lead to the same short-sighted policies. This is true partly because there now exists a safety net of international agreements that allow governments to coordinate economic, trade, monetary and financial policies. An important part of the safety net is the system of multilateral rules through which most major trading countries and many smaller ones bind their trading interests in a contract. The system is the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and it was first signed 40 years ago today.

GATT is now a family of 95 countries. Several other countries are negotiating their accession. This expansion is not only a source of pride, it is a sign that the system can still provide the necessary stimulation to world trade. Drawing from the experiences of the 1930s, when world trade fell by half over a two-year period and political conflicts between nations grew sharper, GATT devised rules to provide stability and predictability for all those engaged in trade: investors, producers, importers and exporters.

GATT's architects understood many truths about multilateral cooperation. They created no bureaucracy. GATT was, and is, a small organization. Nor did they suppose that sovereign states could be forced to act against their will. Instead. they devised a system of mutuality of rights and obligations that puts great pressure on governments to act in the common good. Decisions are achieved through consensus, not through the counting of votes. This

B UDAPEST — The news that B Secretary of State George Shuitz went home from Moscow without agreement on a summit meeting came as a shock to an East-West meeting of journalists here, even though Moscow later seemed to change its mand.

Some high-level Soviet officials were present, and they obviously did not know what had happened or why. Two of them, separately, said they did not believe that Mikhail Gorbachev had changed tack again and re-linked a summit meeting for the signing of a treaty eliminating totermediate-range missiles to a ban on "star wars." So America, they said, must have comes up with new obstacles.

But it is clear that Mr. Gorbachev did switch gears and tried to show that he was not in a hurry to see President Reagan. The incident demonstrates that with or without glasnost we know very little about Kremlin politics.

It is conceivable that this was an other example of traditional Soviet negotiating tactics, trying to squeeze extra concessions at the last minute. Despite their vastly improved know-. ledge of the American scene. Soviet decision-makers may wrongly have thought that Ronald Reagan's recent setbacks would make him willing to give more to Mr. Gorbachev.

Almost all the evidence, however, goes against these speculations. Political and all the speculations and the speculations are speculations. ical problems of his own at a critical moment are a far more probable cause of Mr. Gorbachev putting off the commitment to a dazzling duet performance with the president.

Reports had spread among top East European officials that Mr. Gorbachev's speech celebrating the 70th anniversary of the Bolshevik revolution was going to be a block buster. The speech apparently was submitted for approval to the Central Committee last week and aroused sharp criticism and dispute. Nobody professed to know whether he has therefore decided to make the speech less startling, or to go through with it and try to overwhelm his critics. In any case, the Easterners concluded that he did not feel it was a good time to announce that he was about to cuddle up with President Reagan, Apparently, however, he underesti-mated the American reaction, and also does not want to appear to be undermining better relations.

The Russians know that if a treaty is not signed and presented to the U.S. Senate for ratification before the end of the winter, they probably would have to wait a couple of years, after elections and a review period for the new U.S. administration. They evidently do still want to move on with a series of arms control agreements to buttness Mr. Gorbachev's call for "new thinking" ing foreign as well as domestic policy, Mos-

Taking Stock of Reagan, The Markets Are Chilled

By Anthony Lewis

BOSTON — One intractable fact world as they struggle to regain confidence. For nearly 15 more months, harring the inexpected, the United States will have as its president a man with no grasp of economic reality and no ability to deal with it.

Ronald Reagan's term runs until noon on Jan. 20, 1989. Contemplating that prospect, a world accustomed to looking to Washington for economic leadership wonders whether some way can be found to get around the vacu-um in the White House.

In London, the Financial Times wrote editorially this week of the U.S. government's duty to respond to the worldwide financial crisis. It spoke of the undeniable fact that, at a critical juncture, cobody seems to he in charge" in Washington. Then it said:

"There is, sadly, a fundamental inability at the top to grasp complex issues, not seen at a presidential level since Herbert Hoover. Historical comparisons with previously incapacitated chief executives like Woodrow Wilson may now seem relevant." The paper went on to say what a lot of people have been thinking: that the American sys-tem of presidential leadership should be sidestepped now by having others act in Mr. Reagan's name. In other words. America needs a regency.

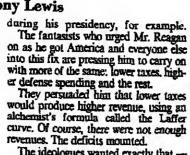

The favorite candidates to act for the president are Howard Baker, the White House chief of staff, and James Baker, the secretary of the Treasury. The Finan-cial Times looked wistfully to them "to carry the ball the president has fumbled."

Others in the financial world agree. But just imagine what it must be like to be the two Bakers these days. Imag-ine trying to create a meaningful financial policy while you work for a president who not only fails to understand hnt actively resists reality.

Last week, as the markets recled, Mr. Reagan offered a new explanation every day: It was just profit-taking. It was Congress's fault. The crisis "appears to be over." Finally the two Bakers somehow persuaded him to accept amicable oegotiations with Congress. The next day he was denouncing Congress again. Any time Mr. Reagan gets oear a microphone, there is no telling what he will say, or how he will injure confidence. He truly believes the absurdities he utters; that he is not responsible for the doubling of the national debt

Letters intended for publication should be addressed "Letters to the Editor" and contain the writer's signature, name and full address. Letters should be brief and are subject to editing. We cannot be responsible for the return of unsolicited manuscripts.

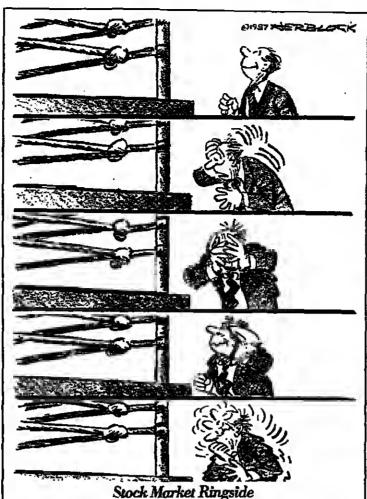

The ideologues wanted exactly that—so they could argue for lower social spending. They still do. The editors of The Wall Street Journal are urging Mr. Reagan to veto any tax increase, however trivial. That is the kind of thing the two Bakers have to deal with. And how do you silence a man who believes in fantasies and who is still the president?

The next 15 months are going to be a painful test for the constitutional system of fixed presidential terms. In a parliamentary system, a leader who had frit-tered away his country's assets would be moved aside when the crisis came.

Mr. Reagan is in danger of losing his one great asset as president: his aura of self-confidence. He admired Franklin Roosevelt for that quality. But there is no Roosevelt in the president who talks so fumblingly about the crash of 1987.
For critics of Mr. Reagan, there is no satisfaction as his emptiness is generally perceived. We are all in his boat. The New York Times.

Scribblers Take Note: This Is Not Learning

I OWA CITY. Iowa — With their football team off to a so-so season, studeots at the University of lowa have other victories to hail. They are winning the battle against the severest curse on this, or any other, campus: boring professors.

Some 1,500 undergraduates are paying $18.75 a semester to a local company that supplies class notes. The notetakers are graduate students paid $7.50 per class by the company. With some-one else absorbing the boredom, under-graduates who find themselves stuck with a deadhead professor have several options, all worthy: Read a book for another course, sleep in class or skip class altogether and go use the library.

A debate rages at the university, a public institution with 27,000 students. The Daily lowan, the student newspaper, took note of the oote business the first week of school. A month later, The Des Moines Register, scooped by the students but catching up, put the story oo its front page. It reported that the "note-taking service has students smiling and UI professors outraged and threatening legal action."

Instead of shouting "sue, sue," the affronted professors should learn to teach, teach. If a course is taught by a professor skilled in opening minds, rather than closing them, students will be too intellecmally engaged to be bothered with notes. The students of Plato, who lectured at the Academy without a text, thrived on that kind of aumosphere. The master's thoughts were imprinted on the heart.
"When the mind is thinking." Plato wrote, "it is talking to itself." By Colman McCarthy

Not every teacher is a Plato, nor every student a Dionysius. But all students have a right to a classroom environment that does not put them at the mercy of a hack professor who thinks that prattling words equals sharing knowledge. A university is not a secretarial school, and professors should not be allowed to cow snidents into taking dictation.

The debate is not only about note-taking. It is about passivity and coercion, the longtime enemies of learning. Professors in front of a group of scribhling freshmen are not teaching. They're "covering ground." And yard-age cannot be gained if studeots want to he more than memorizers, ventriloquists or secretaries. For the professor to take time for questions and debate. and try to get minds working rather than fingers, would threaten the course schedule. Besides midterms are near and students are responsible for every utterance or mumbling of the profes-sor. There is ground to be covered.

Students, fearing a professor's power to give low grades, are coerced to cooperate. But not if they have the luck of a local note-taking company. In the book Neil Postman and Charles Weingartner describe teachers who forget their calling and go into the "information dissemination" business. Others see themselves as transmitters of the cultural heritage. In that context, note-taking proves the success of the education business. It is all there in black and white, in the students own script. And thrown away after the final exam. with the course and dull professor for-gorien by the first dorm party.

While visiting the University of Iowa. was invited to speak with a journalism class. I noticed that many of the 40 students were taking notes. Alarmed, I asked if they would join me in an experiment. Get up. I said, and go outside the building. Stand on the curb for 15 minutes and count all the red cars and green cars that pass. Any shade of red, any shade of green. For 15 minutes. Then come back to answer questions.

Every student rose and went for the door. When they were halfway down the hall. I called them back. My questions were these: Didn't anyone think it was stupid to be counting red cars and green cars? Why didn't anyone inquire about the purpose of the experiment? Do you fet professors push you around this way? Worse, it was raining. Why did no one say he or she didn't want to get wet? The purpose of the experiment then became clear to the students: You are going to school, first, to learn by questioning and second, to obtain answers to your questions. So begin by questioning oppressive authority and go on to asking whether you are get-ting your money's worth.

If not, tell the professors to go stand in the rain and count the red cars and green ears. Let them take notes, 100, here is ground to be covered.

First, Cut Strategic Arms

In the U.S.-Soviet controversy over the Strategic Defense Initiative, both parties seem to have weighty arguments. It is true that the doctrine of mutual assured destruction, based as it is on the threat of an apocalyptic nuclear response to an armed attack, is an inherently immoral approach to national and international security. Moreover, a nuclear war by accident is a distinct possibility.

Anti-nuclear missile defenses on both sides — as advocated by the United States — would certainly be preferable to maintaining largely redundant offensive forces, assuming that the defenses were feasible. But it is also true — as contended by the Soviet Unioo - that the deployment of such defenses now, when the arsenals of both powers are saturated with offensive arms, would

Competitive development of new technologies can never be symmetrical and suspicions may arise that what is actually being sought is the acquisition of first strike potential, capable of neutralizing or at least minimizing the effects of a re-sponse to such a strike. It would be difficult to avoid an accelerated buildup of offensive systems capable of overwhelm-ing the defenses of the opponent. What both parties should do first is to eliminate verifiably their strategic nuclear arsenals and thereby to remove the threat of a counterforce attack. Only then might it become necessary for each side to deploy some defenses in order to protect its vital command centers against a possible attack with nuclear weapons that may have escaped verification. Research in the field of hallistic missile defenses could therefore continue, but deployment of such defenses should be deferred at least until the strategic weapons are removed.

405 MILLION DM GAME Our best ever - the new greatly improved SUDDEUTSCHE KLASSENLOTTERIE's 82nd Prize

Game gives you golden opportunities to win even more than ever before. In fact there are bigger, better and more prizes than in any of our previous series. Well over 437,000 guaranteed prizes with a total value of 405,610,000 DM will be raffled out of a mere 900,000 ticket numbers.

There will be 26 draws during the course of the series with the following total of guaranteed Top Prizes: 32 x 100,000 DM, 26 x 250,000 DM, 8×500,000 DM, 14× 1,000,000 DM and 5 x 2,000,000 DM. And another 437,506 prizes ranging up to 80,000 DM complete out new offer. You will also lind, that at the time when numbers are drawn and eliminated, the prices are much larger than the actual stakes paid.

Making many happy winners is our business

.. and opportunities in the Sk.L are really super. With a limited supply of only 900,000 icket numbers in the game, we guarantee that 437,592 prizes totaling well over 405 million DM will be railled. This means nearly every second number is a winner, which creates the mathematical probability to win by participating with at least three tickets with different numbers. One complete follery (series), extending over a 6 month period, is divided into 6 classes. Each single class has 4 draws (one every Saturday) except the 6th Imain) class which has 6 drawing days running over a period of five weeks. The total of winning numbers and the value of prizes increase from class to class up to the last six draws of the series when six prizes of 2 million DM each will be raffied!

The lottery is state administered

This institution, sponsored by the Federal States of Baden-Wurttemberg, Bayaria, Hesse and Rhineland-Palatinate, is controlled by an official board of directors in Munich. The prize schedule is the basis of the lottery showing all the prizes and drawing dates. This is compiled and agreed to by the authorities involved before the series starts. All data shown thereon will be followed in detail. The draws are public and state controlled thus giving the assurance that all prizes are given to their rightful winners. Tickets are sold solely through lottery agents, who have to be appointed by the financial ministers of the Federal States concerned.

Moscow Indicates Agreement On Terms for a Summit in '87

By Celestine Bohlen

Washington Past Service
MOSCOW — A Soviet Foreign Ministry spokesman said Thursday that the United States and Soviet Union had agreed on the terms of a summit meeting to take place before the end of the year.

Boris D. Pyadyshev, in a shift of terminology, said at a press brief-ing that the two sides had "an understanding that together with an agreement on medium- and shorter-range weapons, questions relating to strategic offensive weap-ons and the ABM Treaty will be thoroughly discussed."

"This will be sufficient to bold a summit meeting this year." he said. Last week during a visit here by Secretary of State George P. The Associated Press

BEIRUT - Gunmen in a speeding car sprayed three French Em-bassy guards with automatic rifle fire Thursday as they were shopping in Christian East Beirut. Police said two officers were killed.

A police spokesman said the two gunmen "sped away immediately after shooting the three French soldiers."

There was no immediate claim of responsibility for the attack. Christian militiamen in control of the area sealed off the attack site.

The spokesman said the guards, French gendarmes, were shot with 9mm automatic rifles as they were "buying fruits and antiques from two adjacent shops in Dawra," a predominantly Armenian neighborhood.

In Paris, the Foreign Ministry issued a statement saying France "condemns the odious attack."

"An investigation was opened immediately by the Lebanese authorities with whom the French Embassy in Lebanon is in constant contact," the statement said.

It said the ministry "addresses its condolences to the cruelly stricken es and to the comps of the National Gendarmerie, struck once more" - a reference to gendarmes killed earlier this year in France. The report reflected high-level concern about Mikhail S. Gorbachev's most explosive domestic issue.

"I can assure you with full responsibility: The rumors that are spreading among the population that prices for food products and some industrial goods will soon surge upward, have absolutely no basis." wrote Anatoli N. Komin, deputy bead of the state committee on prices. Rumors of rising prices have taken on a special importance since June, when Communist Party leaders said that price "reform" must be an part of efforts to revive the economy.

Coming at a time when there is still believed to be resistance to Mr. Gorbachev on the committee, the Yeltsin affair has probably set back his effort to consolidate power and may have weakened his political position.

Mr. Yeltsin's actions have not been reported publicly in the Soviet Union, but rumors have circulated in Moscow in recent days that there was some kind of confrontation at last week's meeting. The willing-ness of officials to discuss the de-velopments seemed partly the re-sult of the increased openness

Soviet Scientists Reject U.S. Guilt On AIDS Virus

MOSCOW — Leading Soviet scientists have rejected accusations in the Soviet media that the Pentagon manufactured the AIDS virus as part of a U.S. biological warfare program.

"Not a single serious scientist has even hinted that AIDS was artificially manufactured," Roald Z. Sagdeev, a space expert who was one of a panel from the Soviet Academy of Sciences, said at a news conference Thursday. "The academy has never had anything to do with such accusations. Another panel member, Vitali L Goldansky, said the accusation was a typical example of groundless sensationalism by journalists. "I al-ways protested about such state-

France to Impose Tax On Erotic Videotex

France is to impose a 33-per-cent tax on the sexually explicit message services that account for much of the traffic on the state telephone company's videotex system, known as Minitel. The little terminals, distributed free to about three million French homes so far, offer an electronic telephone directory, news and other data, including private message services that put subscribers in touch with each other to exchange intimate fan-tasies in great detail — anonymously or otherwise. The message services advertise with suggestive posters. Minitel users of "sex services" account for an estimated third of the traffie on the network.

Although telecommunications authorities bave resisted curbing the lucrative sex messages, they have been increasingly embar-rassed by the bad publicity. Gérard Longuet, the post and tele-communications minister, has insisted that private videotex communications should no more be subject to censorship than mail or telephone conversations. But be now says that his ministry sbould "participate in the defense of morality."

Arias Says Peace Plan Is 'at an Impasse'

By James LeMoyne

New York Times Service SAN JOSE, Costa Rica - President Oscar Arias Sáncbez of Costa Rica, the architect of the Central American peace plan, says that negouations to put the plan into efect are "at an impasse" and that Nicaragua must make new concessions to enhance the peace process. In an interview Tuesday night, Mr. Arias, the winner of this year's Nobel Peace Prize, said Nicaragua's continued refusal to negotiate a cease-fire with American-backed guerrillas remained the main obstacle to a negotiated settlement of guerrilla wars in the region and to the greater political freedom called for in the peace accord. The Costa Rican leader's remarks came at a critical time. On Nov. 5 each of the Central American nations is to announce how it intends to live up to its commitments. And two months later, the presidents of the five countries that signed the accord are to meet to evaluate its success. The foreign ministers of those countries met in Costa Rica on Tuesday and Wednesday to define the procedures for carrying out the accord. Several Central American officials said the key point of discussion was whether all provisions of the treaty would have to go into effect simultaneously or whether they could be carried out gradually

Diego Rivera and New British Works

An exhibition of the work of Diego Rivera is at the . Hayward Gallery to Jan. 10, tracing the artist's career through oils, works on paper, a major group of Cubist pictures, and large-scale reproductions of some murals. A film sets the murals in the context of the artist's life and the turbulent history of Mexico, and the story of the Mexican revolution will be told in documents and photographs. The show was organized by the Detroit Institute of Arts and the Mexican Instituto Nacional de Bellas Artes for the artist's centenary year of 1986. The London showing closes a tour of North America and Europe. An accompanying show is "Artists Look at Contemporary Britain," works commissioned by the South Bank Centre from nine British artists on contemporary subjects.

Making Maestros Into Heroes...

by Roberto Suro

ARL Italy — Hard at work on his latest movie. Franco Zeffirelli is trying to create a portrait of an artist that he thinks is suitable to an artless age. On the set one recent morning, the major challenge lay with C. Thomas Howell, the 20-year-old actor cast in the title role of "The Young Toscanini," who confesses, "Before I took this part the only descired music I had been the only classical music l had heard was in Bugs Bunny cartoons." Zeffirelli sbouts "Cut! Cut!

Cut!" to make himself beard over a sweet passage from "Rigoletto" that blares from loudspeakers. The young Californian slumps behind a piano as if he knows what is comsearch of perfection, a great man bursting with energy and joy. Now try it again," the director says, smil-

Giving lessons in music appreci-ation and craft are only two of the challenges involved in making movies that interweave musical performance with dramatic narrative. Technical difficulties and expenses abound. But the genre seems to be enjoying a revival with aesthetic and commercial benefits. Zeffirelli is one of a growing number of directors who see music as a ser of directors who see music as a source for a kind of protagonist that can have a special appeal to-day. And, following the success of Milos Forman's "Amadeus" and Zeffirelli's own film production of "La Traviata," there is a growing awareness that musical movies can turn a profit.

"Amadeus," Zeffirelli's new movie and "Stradivari," Giacomo Battiato's film biography of the leg-endary violin maker starring An-thony Quinn — also being shot in Italy — all revolve around musicians portrayed as far from ideal human beings who remain beroes because they are obsessed with their own creative visions. Music serves to glorify obsession, and keeps the men from becoming mere

"The Young Toscanini" focuses on the conductor's first love and his first success. Filming is taking place against the gilded backdrop of the Teatro Petruzzelli, a turn-of-the-century gem in Bari, a southern Italian port city. Sound technicians are setting up a scene in which Toscamini is rehearsing a group of singers. Four bits of music are interspersed with dialogne.

OTHING is happening on cue, and the exasperated director screams: "We are in the process of wasting half a day of shooting and $100,000. Are we ready or are we not?"

Finally the technicians are ready, but on the next take Howell is again the problem. "There is still not enough joy," Zeffirelli admonishes the actor.

be is taking his audience backstage. But he still suffers instants of despair with his favorite genre. Calling a break in the shooting, the director turns to a visitor and says.

Never make a musical movie; music costs millions."
Why bother with the difficulties of wedding film and music? For one thing, Battiato explains, music and dance are about the only art forms that come across in the movies, and dancers are corpored and sensuous, not easily depicted as abstract intellects. Painting. sculpting and especially writing are not activities that come across visu-ally. Secondly, films like "Amadeus" and "Traviata" have shown that a large number of people who do not ordinarily listen to elassical music like it when they hear it in a movie theater — they then often buy the soundtracks, boosting the profitability of the whole production. Moreover, the appeal is inter-

In a secular age that adores suc-

Where Have All the Folk Singers Gone?

by Stephen Holden

EW YORK — Reading the memoirs of Joan Baez and Judy Collins, folk-music pioneers who are both now in their late 40s, one is tempted to mourn the vanishing tradition of the folk-music heroine. Through the '60s and '70s, the image of the long-haired guitartoting folkie with flowers in ber hair, burning with noble ideals, was a clicbe that, while often ridiculed, bespoke an artistic seriousness that in the age of music video is disappearing from the pop mainstream.

So far in the 80s, that tradition has spawned only one new star, Suzanne Vega, In a pop climate where Madonna reigns supreme. Vega, who is 28, is viewed by many as a classy anachronism.

In 1960, at the dawn of the folk movement, male singers — Elvis Presley. Johnny Mathis, Frank Sinatra and the Everly Brothers - overwhelmingly dominated commercial music. The most popular female voice in the country was the post-pubescent whine of Connie Francis. But during the following decade, the soul and folk music movements swept more substantial female voices to the forefront of commercial pop. Aretha Frank-lin helped launch a gospel-based pop-soul tradition that is now being carried forward by younger singers like Whitney Houston and Anita Baker.

At the same time, Baez and Collins in-spired a horde of dreamy-eyed female trou-badours to take up the guitar and explore the romantically mythopoeic forest of tradinonal folk. The influence of Bob Dylan's free-form effusions and the iconography of the folk beroine quickly merged, as composer-performers like Joni Mitchell, Carly Simon and Janis lan carried folk romanticism into the realm of psychosexual self-contempla-

Until the late 1970s, this reflective pop tradition, which coincided with the flowering of feminism, seemed to be as firmly entrenched a genre as the pop-soul diva. But in the 1980s, the audience for confessional folk has steadily decreased. One by one. many of the major folk-oriented stars of the 60s and '70s, including Baez, Collins, Ian and Arlo Guthrie, to name four out of dozens, were dropped by major record labels. Those who have hung on — Linda Ronstadt, Carly Simon, Jackson Browne — bave done so he moving out of folk into other areas. so by moving out of folk into other areas, Suzanne Vega, whose second album, "Soli-tude Standing," has sold a million copies, is the only star to emerge from the folk movement's younger wing.

Even within the folk-pop tradition, Vega's is a very different sensibility compared with her forerunners. Alcof, guarded, enigmatic. she does not extend the same open sensuality as the folk madonnas and sexual explorers who preceded ber. Where the folk beroines of the '60s and '70s were eager to extend themselves — to causes and to lovers — Vega holds herself in reserve.

Joan Baez at 46 is as unreserved today as she was in the 1960s. Though ber voice, at her Carnegie Hall concert earlier this month, sounded darker and grainier than it used to, it remains a powerful rhetorical instrument. When on the stage, Baez still accompanies herself on the guitar. And while ber material is more pop-oriented than it used to be, ber blend of the personal and the political hasn't

When Baez appeared on the musical scene in the early '60s, ber singing and public image combined to distill the feminine ideal of the burgeoning folk movement. To Bob Dylan's moralistic post-Beat rebel, she played the nurturing earth mother. Her glo-riously uplifting soprano seemed to embody a perfect balance between spiritual purity and wbolesome sensuality. At her finest, it could be argued, ber singing transcended more sophisticated (and thereby tainted) musical idioms. She approached the range, power and timbral beauty of a classical concert soprano without the affectations and elitism of many operatically schooled sing-

To a generation of college-educated liberals. Baez and Collins loomed as real-life romantie beroines for nearly a decade. Their personal style — cosmopolitan but not jaded, self-reliant but yielding — permitted them to be idolized by men and emulated by momen. Both promet projected complex women. Both women projected complex three-dimensional public images. For more than 25 years, their two careers have paralleled one another uncannily. Both women began making records in the early '60s that leaned heavily on traditional folk material and then in the mid-60s began branching out in more contemporary direc-tions. Both released their last major hits in 1975. Baez's "Diamonds and Rust," a senti-mental replay of ber relationship with Dy-lan, summarized the naive romanticism of the folk movement in its early period. Collins's hit version of Stephen Sondheim's "Send in the Clowns" culminated her farranging exploration of non-folk idioms. This year, both women released albums on Gold Castle, the small California label that has become a refuge for '60s folk singers. While Baez's and Collins's latest albums are hardly groundbreaking, both are solid records that contain interesting original songs. Why then are Baez and Collins now relegated to the margins of pop instead of center? For one thing, there is an inevitable generational turnover. Each generation lays claim to its own pop beroes and heroines who express the mood of the times. In the age of the music video, pop music isn't expected to carry much literary weight. At the same time, the baby-boomer audience that grew up with Baez and Collins is no longer looking for role models. The generation that grew up believing that popular music could raise the world's consciousness enough to change things for the better has seen the civil rights movement unravel and the sexual revolution come to a screeching balt.

A Gargantuan Show Puts Austria on Stage

by Joseph Fitchett

RUSSELS — Capping the mam-moth exhibitions around the world in recent years about fin-de-siècle Vienna, Belgium is the stage for an even vaster celebration of the culture of Austria — a three-month exhibition and festival of masterpieces sweeping from the Hapsburg era to contemporary art.

It is gargantuan fare. The 37 separate art exhibitions range from "The Treasures of the Golden Fleece" and "Old Masters from the Albertina" to showings of the living artists' work, of photography, ceramics and folk art. Separate shows are devoted to the masters of the Viennese Secession, Gustav Klimt, Egon Shiele, Oskar Kokoschka and Alfred Kubin.

Musical events occur almost daily, with more than 50 groups and performers appearing. An evening can offer eboirs or opera, chamber music or the Vienna Philharmonic, the work of Johann Strauss or Arnold Schoenberg.

This panorama of Anstria's cultural history is called Europalia 1987, the latest in a series of festivals in Belgium celebrating European culture. Founded in 1958 as an outgrowth of the World's Fair in Brussels, European culture. palia adopted the formula of featuring a single national culture in 1969; since then-Europalia festivals bave been mounted roughly every other year. At the last Europa-lia two years ago, which drew more than a million visitors, the theme was Spain. Europalia's organizers described it as the higgest Spanish cultural event ever beld outside that Karl Zakovsek by Egan Schiele.

The current Europalia is also unique as an opportunity to sense the character and conti-unity of Vienna's perennial fascination with baroque forms. The gem-studded regalia of the Order of the Golden Fleece are refracted in the stylized robes of Klimt's figures, the music of Schoenberg has expressionistic ech-oes in the raw paintings of Kokoschka, the Wiener Werkstätte's silverware is more at home in a courtly decor than in the functional selvings associated with the Bauhaus.

The scale of Europalia offers relief, paradoxically, from the overwhelming intensity and volume of normal blockbuster shows. In contrast to the big Vienna shows in recent years. Europalia's plethora of single-theme shows provides more extensive treatment of each artist's work, more time to digest it before moving on to another show and often more scope for helpful commentary about the work itself. (A 20-minute film at the Klimi exhibit, for example, brings out clear-ty the three periods of his career: an initial attempt to bring to life neo-classical 19th-century realism, then the formalistic style for which he is best known and which he adopted after seeing the Byzantine frescoes in (Ravenna and finally the more plastic and more mystical late paintings in a style influenced by his exposure to the Impressionists.)

There is breathing space, literally, because some of the best exhibitions are outside the capital in other cities — for example, a stunning selection from the Albertina is on show in Antwerp. Most are less than an hour's train ride from Brussels.

From "The Golden Fleece.

The exhibitions are an opportunity to visit these towns, which have their own artistic treasures and gastronomic pleasures. Ghent, for example, offers both an extraordinary Van Eyek alterpiece and one of Beignum's supreme restaurants, Apicius, whose ownerebef is a talented alumnus of Brussels's three-star Villa Lorraine restaurant. Antwerp offers its Ensor collections and restanrants with Belgian specialties at lower prices than Brussels.

To belp visitors afford these restaurants, Europalia has arranged cut-rate fares and botel accommodation for one-day or week-end trips to the festival from most European countries. Details can be obtained from the cultural sections of Belgian embassies or from Europalia Belgiam, Rue Royale 10. Brussels, tel: 513-1876. Europalia continues until Dec. 16.

Making 'Old' Harpsichords

by Thomas Netter

HATEAU D'OEX, Switzerland — Bruce Kennedy re-members precisely when he committed himself to becoming a maker of harpsichords.

I had just met my wife-to-be Kirsti while visiting Lausanne, and we passed by a shop window with a harpsichord in it. I said. I'm going to make one of those one day. She looked at me like I was crazy."

Seven years and about 45 harpsichords later, Kennedy is annually producing seven or eight classical instruments modeled on 18th-century designs in the sbop that bears his name just outside this isolated mountain village in Switzerland.

Kennedy, 34, who comes from a sub-urb of Philadelphia, has become one of the foremost craftsmen in a trade that is as sparsely populated as the valley, and as old as the local Swiss red spruce and other woods that give the instruments their special character and resonance.

"Some harpsichords sound good, but don't work so well, and some work well. but don't sound so good," says Robert Wooley, professor of the harpsichord at the Royal College of Music in London, who visited Kennedy's shop recently.
"Bruce very much represents the classical approach, but apart from producing high quality instruments, what makes nique, I think, is his use of old wood. He combines good technical craftswork with mechanical excellence and an excellent feeling for sound."

T is this feeling for sound that distinguishes Kennedy's instruments from those built by a handful of other craftsmen in the eyes of such renowned players as Gustav Leon-hardt of The Netherlands and wellbeeled amateur aficionados like William F. Buckley who will pay steep prices for such hand-made instruments.

Although harpsichords huilt in the tradition of the 18th century remain a rarity in these days of kits and machinefabricated instruments, what sets the barpsichords manufactured by Kenneapart is the sound from a hand-ned soundboard made of 300-yearold Swiss red spruce.

Our wood is tailored for the performing trade, and musicians like that are not looking for factory-made instruments," Kennedy says. "So the musicians come down here, already knowing about the wood, and have a very precise idea of what they're look-

It was the prospect of a supply of fine old wood that helped motivate Kenne-dy to settle here with his Scandinavian wife in 1980. There was also the beauty of the valley and the village of 2,800 people, and what he calls the cooperative attitude of Swiss bankers not in a burry to recoup an investment in a young former pre-med student and pianist who had already huilt a score of instruments during his American apprenticeship as first a keyboard maker and then instruments builder.

LTHOUGH the soundboard wood should be at least 300 years old to have what Kennedy calls the proper resonance, the supply is kept adequate through the dismantling of ancient chalets and the availability of wood that grows on the north side of the valley at a height of 1,200 to 1,400 meters (about 4,000 to 4,600 feet) above

The practice in the past and today is that's where you find the best soundboard wood." Kennedy says, explaining that wood growing higher or lower lacks the same sort of resonance. "The peasants in this valley would naturally have used this kind of material for their chalets. We have wood in the shop which dates from 1545."

Using wood of such age and resonance has given a tone and quality to Kennedy's instruments that has won plaudits from musicians and scholars. It has also won Kennedy a growing nber of contracts to produce concert-quality instruments at prices rang-ing from $10,000 to $23,000,

It is essential for a really top maker to produce harpsichords that feel comfortable and work well, but they also must have a good sound," Wooley said. "Newer wood sounds too bright, while older wood instruments have a much smoother sound."

Such passion for an original, 18thcentury sound extends to Kennedy's use of all the materials that go into his instruments. To recreate the proper tone of old wire, for example, he sent samples of 18th-century harpsichord wire to researchers in England who discovered they were made of iron with a touch of phosphorous —a process long discontinued. Now, a craftsman named Malcolm Rose in England produces the 18-century-type wire without the car-bon of today's steel, a process Kennedy describes as "getting pretty close to the original stuff."

The wires are held hy pins in a plank of red oak, and plucked by a jack made of a pear-wood body and a holly-wood tongue with wild boar hristle springs. (The jacks could be made of plastic, as most are, but are instead hand-made by Machenet Macheret, the apprentice.) Keyboards are made of linden, usually covered with ebony, boxwood or bone, the latter imported from France.

A Small Revolution in France

by Erik de Mauny

AEN. France — A small revolution is taking place in French schools. Its effects may not be apparent to the casual observer, since it so far involves only a relatively small number of parents and pupils in three widely scattered centers. Nevertheless, it is a genuine revolution, which began with the decision to introduce music as a major part of the curriculum in certain selected primary schools, thus giving a place of honor to a subject conspicuous by its absence from the French educational scene at large.

The experiment was launched two years ago by the regional music con-servatories in Tours and Colmar in association with local state primary schools. In each of these schools, a maîtrise, or choral department, was created, with staff from the conservatory providing a basic musical training in daily periods for children 8 years old and up, while the school itself remained responsible for their general education.

Caen has now gone a step further. At a local primary school, morning classes are held from Monday through Saturday not only in music hut also for dance, amounting to some 10 hours a week in all. So far, this combination makes the Caen experiment unique, and it is already expanding. When it started last year it covered three classes of 8-to-10year-olds. This year, with the addition of two more teaching posts, making four in all, the intake will be enlarged to include children of up to 12 or 13 in the first year of the secondary cycle. With the first two hours of each morning taken up with music and dance, the children then follow the rest of their lessons within the normal school timetable. This means they are fully stretched, but there have been no complaints.

The prime mover in the Caen experiment is an Englishman, Robert Weddle, formerly organist at Coven-try Cathedral and director of music at the Edinburgh Academy, who came to the Calvados department nearly eight years ago at the invitation of the Caen conservatory, where he is pro-fessor of choral singing. In that post, and as conductor of the local choral society, he has been responsible for many outstanding instrumental and choral performances, covering an un-usually wide range, from Baroque music, including a memorable production of three short oratorios by the 17th-century Italian composer Giacomo Carissimi, to a recent col-laboration, at the Gibellina Festival in Sicily in August on a new version of Iannis Xenakis's "Oresteia," the choir of over 200 including a group from Normandy.

Robert Weddle, lower left, is developing choral voices in a lively and imaginative way.

OBERT Weddle now directs the music classes in the ry school, and is developing relating the boys' voices by closely relating practice and musical theory in a lively and imaginative way far removed from the traditional teaching of sol-fège in France. Danièle Bouhet-Darmor is in charge of the dancing, with classes in classical and modern dance. Here, the girls are in a majority, but the boys also join in, and the girls have their own singing classes.

It was perhaps a greater achievement on his part to have enlisted the support of the Ministry of National Education and the Ministry of Culture from the outset. The two ministries are not always known to work in close harmony - but on this occasion they did. In particular, the project kindled the imagination of the chief inspector of education in Caen. Franck Michel, who did all he could to secure funds for an adequate number of teaching posts at a time of general retrenchment

In the school year that has just started, a further expansion is planned with courses in music and dance being gradually extended to take in the first four years of secondary education. A program of regular concerts is also being drawn up. Above all, with Caen. Tours and Colmar baving hlazed the trail, there seems to be no good reason why other centers should not embark on similar experiments. It is already beginning to happen. For reasons not uncon-nected with national prestige, plans are under way for the creation of a maitrise at Versailles. This will provide the same basic musical education as the other centers, but it will have a further aim: To train boy choristers to sing in the royal chapel of the former palace of the Sun King.

by Leandro Amato. It won't take balletgoers long to realize that in "real life" Tony is Albrecht, Lisa is Giselle and Paolo is Hilarion, the woodcut-ter in love with Giselle. Bathilde, the princess who is Albrecht's liancee, is transformed into a jet-set, bleached-hlonde contessa, played in an effectively overblown cameo by Mariangela Melato. The counterpart of Wil-frid, Albrecht's retainer, is called Patrick and is played persuasively and interestingly by Tommy Rall, once a mere slip of a boy in "Seven Brides for Seven Brothers." What be has to tell Tony may sound corny, but it also happens to be in line with Albrecht's predicament - namely, that the 19th-century Romantic hero is a superfluous man, Albrecht is empty and cynical. But true love can reform him and give him something to live for. He seduces the peasant girl Giselle while engaged to Bathilde. In the supernatural world of the ballet's second act, Giselle's ghost (Wili) forgives him, and he is re-

Ross's symbolism is obvious, but does everyone catch it? Tony looks at a model of the set of "Giselle." The Albrecht cutout has fallen. It lies face down. At the end of the film, Tony will put it right.

N the beginning, Tony tells Patrick his view of Giselle and Albrecht. This is the first time we hear Baryshnikov and others talking the ballet through. It is the film's way of explaining the story to a lay andience -fragmented but clear.

Like Albrecht, Tony goes from woman to woman but needs no feudal right. Every woman apparently wants to sleep with a big star. Alessandra Ferri, as the dancer who performs the title role of Gisclle in the ballet, hears him joke about having no feelings. Like the ballet's hero, Tony feels empty—or so he tells Patrick, who sees no passion in Tony's dancing and adds, "You haven't gotten mature, just professional."

In a rehearsal scene, Lynn Seymour (the Canadian star of Britain's Royal Ballet during the 1960s and '70s) and Baryshnikov give an exposition of the action of Act I. As ballet mistress, Seymour also dances Giselle's mother in the film. Those familiar with Seymour's divorces might get the inside joke when she describes Giselle's mother as a single parent with all the attendant prob-

There is a funny sequence when Victor Barbee, the dancer portraying Hilarion, replete with thick Southern accent, sees his character as tender rather than the "butch" figure Tony commands him to be, Hilarion kills rabbits all day and he, Albrecht, is the only aristocrat around, Tony shouts.

A whiff of a subplot uses Barbee's charac ter, Wade, to explain why Nadine, who has the hallet role of Myrtha, hates men. Leslie Browne's performance is wryly bitter. Na-dine trundles along the child fathered by Wade. And when Tony sharply criticizes Myrtha in rehearsal, it is obvious the star-director and the dancer have had a nasty affair. Myrtha carries a sprig of rosemary for remembrance. Instead of looking "like a tired stewardess," Baryshnikov says, Browne should look as if she wants to kill someone. "Remember what men have done to you," he says, and Nadine glares, "How could I for-YRTHA and the Wilis, all jilted maidens, hate men so much in "Giselle" that they dance them by death. No scene in the film is gratuitous. Certainly the most engaging one is the Italian country lunch held amid the vineyards by Paolo's peasant family for the ballet com-pany. This is the hallet's grape-harvest festi-val, at which Giselle is crowned. And when Tony discovers Lisa and takes her to a castle the hunting-party music of Act II accompanies a view of the castle in the stage set.

Paolo, like Hilarion, tells Lisa that Tony (Albrecht) is engaged to the contessa. She cries while onstage during Ferri's mad scene. She runs away, and we do not know if she is dead, like the ballet "Giselle," until she comes back. What she has done should remain a punchline, but it is very much something someone of her generation would do. In any case, she has not died of a broken heart. Instead, she has come back to look at Tony's second-act solos in "Giselle" and admire his greatness as a dancer.

Giselle's ghost forgives Albrecht; he emerges purified and regenerated. Tony's fascination with the innocent Lisa has given him a new emotional commitment to his dancing. When he met her, he sent her an icecream cake. Persuasively, she assured him she wouldn't gain weight in an unforgettable line: "It's OK — I metabolize very well." In the end, she forgives him for his art.

Few seem able to forgive the film for cutting up "Giselle." Actually, all the dramatic highpoints are present. Act I has been reduced 10 its mime passages. Act II omits Hilarion's dances and part of Myrtha's solos but gives us a good bit of dancing by the Wilis and Ferri and Baryshnikov. And besides, nobody goes to the movies to see in 1965. In an example of art imitating life, Taylor will be making her first film appearance in seven years.

Zeffirelli believes that Toscanini can be a bero to a contemporary audience because he was "a priest, a minister, a servant who respectfully interpreted the works of others. making them come to life with his own

In the director's mind this is a negative reflection on the state of the world. "People loday are nicer than they were in the past, he says, "but they are not as creative; they claborate on the achievements of the past. We do not make creative giants anymore, and I don't think people could relate to them

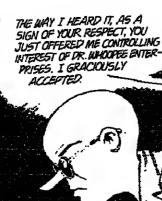

Battisto describes his protagonist in similar terms. A maker of musical instruments more famous than many composers, a man once portrayed as a diabolic creator of secret formulas, Antonio Stradivari will be seen as an artisan with a fire for perfection who is fixated on exercising his craft as best he can," Battiato says.

There are love interests in the Toscanini and Stradivari movies that serve to fill out the characterizations, and in both cases the protagonists happily resolve conflicts be-tween their artistic obsessions and the demands of love.

Howell summed up the appeal of "The Young Toscanin" more simply: "This is certainly not a teen movie, but it will appeal to the younger generation because it is about this kid who never quits and puts up with a lot of pressure and succeeds, kind of like 'Rocky' with music.'

A New Set of Favorites In an Upside Down Market

By VARTANIG G. VARTAN

New York Times Service

EW YORK - Stocks that benefit from lower interest rates and slower economic growth have bounced back into favor as a result of the equity market's brutal sell-off. Last summer the popularity of these groups—utilities, foods, beverages and tobaccos—began to wane as cyclical issues with prospects of sharper earnings gains took over the leadership on Wall Street.

"Now you are seeing people run to these safe haven, or defensive, stocks," said A. Marshall Acuff Jr., portfolio strategist for Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co. "That is typical when

In the electric utility sector, Smith Barney has recommended Baltimore Gas & Electric, Consolidated Edison, Dominion Resources and Houston Industries. Among telephone utilities, the firm likes Ameritech, US West and Centel. It also regards Pepsico. Philip Morris, Gillette, Marion Laboratories, Upjohn and Scott Paper as buys.

A similar theme is sounded by John D. Connolly, chairman of the investment policy committee at Dean Witter Reynolds. He said, "We're playing defense."

AST WEEK this strategy called for adding Pepsico, General Mills, Kellogg and Philip Morris to the firm's recommended list. Dean Witter also likes the electric utilities, but ir looks with far less favor on basic resource and capital goods

Elaine Garzarelli, director of sector analysis at Shearson Lehman Brothers, turned negative on the stock market in September after her mathematical models based on 13 economic factors started to flash danger signals.

"We are still in bearish territory, but things are getting better," she said. "Before the washout we still need to see some further improvement in the dividend yield of common stocks."

Although she has no way of knowing when stock prices will turn up again, Ms. Garzarelli said, "When the market rebounds, and the process of the prices will be up for a force the distribution stocks."

cyclical stocks will go up faster than disinflation stocks." Robert S. Salomon Jr. director of equity research at Salomon Brothers, does not rely on the safe-haven approach to investing. "I think the economy will show a good deal of resilience in 1988, although there will be some slowing of growth," he said. Accordingly, he believes that the capital spending area still offers the best prospects for earnings growth.

The firm's recommendations in this area range from Martin Marietta, Intergraph and Caterpillar to General Electric, Digital Equipment and International Business Machines. Other favorites include Lotus Development, Advanced Micro Devices, Hewlett-Packard, Motorala and Terres Instruments.

Packard, Motorola and Texas Instruments. Telephone issues on the firm's recommended list are American Telephone & Telegraph, MCI Communications, Bell Atlantic and Pacific Telesis. Meanwhile, the U.S. dollar's slump on foreign-exchange mar-kets raised speculation that interest rates may be lowered in Britain, tending to make the pound a less attractive currency and thus bolstering the dollar.

The Guardian newspaper said interest rates eased in London, pointing to a half-point cut in the base lending rate to 9 percent. The Times also quoted analysts who predicted a half-point cut.

The falling dollar and sharply lower closings in the Tokyo and Hong Kong share markets overnight were a negative factor in early trading Thursday but have been pushed to the background for the moment by the speculation that the government may lower interest rates.

The government gave no sign that it was willing to cut rates.

A cut in base rates would be positive for shares, possibly stimulating economic growth and taking upward pressure off sterling, thereby enhancing exporters' prospects, dealers said.

Lower British interest rates could also ease some of the pressure caused by the recent worldwide dumping of securities. An in-crease in liquidity could give investors breathing space to fund the sharp losses over the past two weeks, dealers said.

Analysts have been warning that higher interest rates, which followed the 1929 Wall Street crash, could choke off liquidity, possibly straining the banking system.

Soviet Says Grain Harvest Is Up, But Food Supply Is Below Target

MOSCOW - The Soviet Union is harvesting more grain and producing achieving more live-stock than in 1986, but farmers are still not stock than in 1986, but farmers are still not meeting targets for improving food supplies, the oation's agriculture chief said Thursday.

Viktor P. Nikonov, the member of the Politburo in charge of agriculture, was quoted by the Communist Party newspaper Pravda as telling agroindustrial workers that many regions had met state requirements for supplicate training met state requirements for supplying grain, vegetables, sunflowers and sugar beet.

"In unprecedented complex weather conditions, the harvest of grains, vegetables and industrial graphs group and gethered by former in dustrial crops grown and gathered by farmers is not bad," he said, and livestock production has improved. "At the same time, it must be seen that the tempo of agricultural production is still not meeting the demands of the June 1987 plenum of the Soviet Communist Party Central Com-of the Soviet Communist Party Central Committee: sharply to increase food supplies to the population in the next two to three years."

Anatoli Komin, deputy chief of the state pricing board, did not supply any figures for the grain harvested to date. The official 1987 grain target is 232 million metric tons, compared with a yield of 210 million tons last year.

Mr. Komin said that poor weather had resulted in a smaller harvest of potatoes and vegetaed in a smaller harvest of potatoes and vegeta-bles in central regions that lack black earth. Mikhail S. Gorbachev, the Soviet leader, has made an improvement in food supplies a priority of his economic reform program.

Los Toros Flee the Mexican Market After Eightfold Rise, Stock Index Loses Half Its Value

By Larry Rohter
New York Times Service
MEXICO CITY — Throughout
the boom months of 1987, the volatile Mexican stock market performed more speciacularly than any other in the world. Bot with bulls having turned to bears all around the globe, Mexico is now suffering the steepest, most rapid slide of any major exchange.

Between Jan. 1 and Oct. 5 the Mexican market rose eightfold, and Mexico City's Bolsa de Valores hit an all-time high of 387,000 points, But in the past 15 days of trading, the index has fallen by more than 50 percent, to 183,662, and inves-tors and traders are braced for fur-

On Monday, the market fell a record 16.7 percent, exceeding even the decline recorded on "Black Monday" on Oct. 19. On Tuesday, it slipped another 14.5 percent, meaning that the market's value had fallen by almost $2 billion from its estimated peak value of about $6 billion earlier this month. Brokers, bankers and other analysts said the tailspin, which began

On Oct. 5, the Mexican government intervened in the market, ironically to prevent stocks from going through the roof. One day earlier, Carlos Salinas de Gortari, the budget and planning minister, had been named as candidate of the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party in next year's presidential elections, and the market surged of trading.

The National Securities Commission said it had been forced to halt trading briefly twice that day to prevent "disorderly conditions" that "could lead the price index up to undesired levels." But market spread fears that events may be moving beyond anyone's control. analysts said the action set a precedent that may have led some major players to reconsider their posi-"By intervening, the government signaled to speculators that they could no longer automatically count on quick and gigantic in-creases," said one broker, who outwardly, Mexican officials are minimizing the significance of the Wall Street plungs. In a news conference last week, Manuel Somoza, Alonso, precident of the Mariense. Alonso, president of the Mexican stock exchange, acknowledged the "psychological effect" of events in the United States, but be argued that the impact was unwarranted. Mexico's own problems, however, are daunting, incomes, adjusted for inflation, have declined by 50 percent in the past five years. The peso has fallen from 24 to the dollar to more than 1,600. Annual in-flation has climbed to a record 135 percent. And debt owed to other countries now totals more than 5100 billion.

N.Y. Broker Seeks Capital Infusion

NEW YORK - L.F. Rothschild Holdings Inc., with the help of Salomoo Brothers, has been looking for an infusion of capital either from a partner or buyer, Wall Street sources said.

Changes Planned in Hong Kong

HONG KONG — Hong Kong's financial crisis may lead to some changes, but so far it has brought mostly frayed nerves, breast beating and demands for resignation in a frantic search for blame

For most in the financial game one thing is sure - the party's over. Stocks were once the darling of investors in the British colooy. where bank accounts pay a meager

2.75 percent a year in interest. Share prices had climbed this year to breathtaking heights, sending the Hang Seng index, the main market indicator, soaring.

And just about anyone could sell shares on the market. Even one of the colony's most lavish girlie bars. partly owned by the chairman of the stock exchange himself, Ronald Li, had plans to float shares. Companies that sold stock publicly could expect a huge flood of cash to chase their newly issued shares. The construction concern Wah Stones was 246 times oversubscribed, meaning that only ooe of 247 prospective investors got Oriental Press, a widely read Chinese newspaper, was 310 times oversobscribed, while Geoeral Electronics, a small electronics firm, was also oversubscribed. But on what is now known as

"Black Monday," share prices plunged a staggering 33 percent, and the markets have been jittery

General Electronics, offered at 1.38 Hong Kong dollars (18 U.S. cents) a share, is now a lowly 84 Hong Kong cents, and K. Wah Stones has fallen to 1.04 dollars from 1.18 dollars. Oriental Press is still doggedly above its offer price but well below its highs.

Mr. Li, hoping he could wait out the storm on world markets, closed the the exchange for four days last week When it reopened on Monday prices fell with a vengeance. History has proved him wrong," said Martin Lee, a legislafor in calling for Mr. Li's resigna-Another legislator, Conrad Lam, has questioned the value of the futures market, and others have called for a full-scale inquiry. Changes are likely. Already the wernment is planning to review the stock exchange, and the former banking commissioner. Robert Fell, has been named as a senior

Futures trading will certainly be more tightly regulated after the government and banks, including Beijing's Bank of China, had to throw a 4 billion dollar lifeline 10

Some stockbrokers shrug and say the uproor is to be expected. "It's hell if you do and hell if you don't" said Laurence Amerine of Base your investment strategy on the solid security of gold.

The shock waves that so dramatically rumbled through the world's stock markets are bringing investors back to the fundamentals. No investment is more fundamental than gold.

Why gold? Because gold is a precious metal - not merely a "piece of paper." Its value is intrinsic. Gold moves independently of strictly financial instruments. Gold can be your personal hedge against trade deficits, budget deficits, tight money, loose money, inflation and other political and economic uncertainties. Building up and maintaining one's personal assets naturally implies risk, especially today, when virtually all forms of financial investment are being called into question. Given this overwhelming uncertainty, the shrewdest of today's investors know that a significant personal reserve in physical gold provides the solid bedrock on which to build a strong, more effective investment strategy. Start today to build up your personal reserve of gold bars or gold bullion coins, in complete confidence and confidentiality. See your bank or gold bullion dealer... or write for your free copy of the Mexico today is enjoying the first fruits of the renewal of the program to stabilize its economy. This is a program undertaken in response to the problems arising from its heavy foreign indebtedness and the sharp decline in international petroleum prices in 1986.

A key factor in the renewed energy of the Mexican economy is the process of the "opening" in foreign trade, which has been going on since mid-1985 and which was formalized with Mexico's membership in the General agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) in 1986. These events are deepening the channels that accommodate a swelling flow of commerce and capital that impacts in many ways on investment and

The trade opening is implemented basically by substituting licenses for duties. In addition, duties and ranges of their opplication have been reduced, and administrative procedures related to foreign transactions have been simplified.

This opening toward foreign trade has been accompanied by the control of certain macroeconomic instruments such as the exchange policy. This has been influential, together with other factors, in determining the undervaluation of Mexican currency. The mechanism helps moderate the protection granted to the industrial base, while at the same time fostering on efficient process of import substitution and improving the competitive posture of exports in the various world markets. Mexico's adherence to GATT is considered essential to the process of internationalizing the economy, since a substantial part of world trade in manufactured goods is governed by the policies and standards of that Within Gatt, Mexica is considered a developing nation and is eligible for the special benefits attached to that condition. Through the agreement, then, Mexico seeks to widen access of its products to other markets in an ambiance of enhanced security and preferential Mexico is able to participate in the Uruguay Round of the GATT Trade Negotiations, where it may legitimately try to consolidate advantages for the development of its foreign trade. In addition, GATT is for Mexico a multilateral forum where it can pursue solutions to differences that orise with its commercial partners. In this context, there is already clear evidence of benefits deriving from the structural change taking place in Mexico's foreign trade. The dependence on petroleum has been eased; oil export income is less, while there has been a dynamic growth in non-petroleum shipments. The latter increased on average 24% annually between 1983 and 1986. And in the first half of this year the growth was 30% compared with the same period a year ago The dominant factor in the rise of non-petroleum exports has been the growing strength of manufactured goods; exports of these have doubled in the last three years. Today, moreover, they represent 79% of total non-petroleum exports, compared with 65% in 1963.

Foreign sales of the industrial sector at present account for about 25% of its total national production value; three years ago it was 7%. At the same time, industry managed to substantially improve the ratio of manufactured exports to manufactured imports. In 1980 this was one-to-four; today it has risen to three-to-four.

The increase in the export of goods with high added value is remarkable particularly in the electrical and automative sector. In the latter, sales abroad grew by 48% in 1986, and at a similar rate in 1987. Today they represent one-third of total manufactured exports. Foreign investment has an important part to play in the growth of export activity; it provides the technology for improved production and the know-how for gaining entrance to world markets.

Foreign investment is drawn to Mexico for the country's attractive socio-political conditions, its structure of production costs, and various incentives. Prominent among the last-mentioned is the debt/capital swap mechanism that has produced average savings or earnings of 35% for foreign participating firms that make direct investments in Mexico. In these activities Banco Nacional de Mexico, a financial and fiduciary institution established in 1884, plays a major role in stimulating economic development in general and in the process of internationalizing the Mexican economy in particular. Banco Nacional de Mexico begon promoting Mexico's participation in international financial and commercial ordes in 1929, with the opening of its first agency in New York City. Tadoy Banco Nacional de Mexico has more than 700 branches throughout Mexico, and 13 agencies, branches and representative offices in the principal financial and trade centers of the world. These provide one-third of the total financing that the Mexican banking system offers the nation's foreign trade sector. Banco Nacional de Mexica is concerned principally with furnishing financial support for all phases of the exports of manufactured goods, which this year are expected to reach a record value of $9 billion dollars.

For Mexican foreign trade activities, Banco Nacional de Mexica has developed a broad range of financial and banking services that share the trends and technologies of the international morket. These include market and product courseling, credits for integrated export operations (from production to financing for the foreign buyer), service in foreign exchange, exchange hedging in the domestic market, international treasury on the international morkets, debt/equity swap transactions, etc. Counseling in international trade consists basically of intelligence support to clients in search of goods and markets and in the coupling of

To finance foreign trade, Banco Nacional de Mexico uses funds that come mainly from the programs of the Fund for the Development of Exports (Fondo paro el Fomento de las Exportaciones — FOMEX). Total financing this year is expected to amount to about U.S. $4 billion. The competitive financing terms offered by Fornex through Banco Nacional de Mexico are vital supports for Mexican exporters in their occess to vorious markets. In addition, Banco Nacional de Mexico through its correspondent banks provides competitive financing to the buyer Banco Nacional de Mexico gronts credits for the imports of raw materials, parts and finished products necessary for national development. and for imports that are essential to the expansion of corporate expant capacity. The funds for this purpose usually derive from credit lines negotiated by Banco Nacional de Mexico with its correspondent banks, and from financing agreements the Mexican government has signed with other countries.

Complementing its foreign trade financing, Banco Nacional de Mexica also renders international treasury services to commercial enterprises, in order to help them speed up their production and foreign marketing operations and optimize their treasury reserves in foreign In addition, Banco Nacional de Mexico offers o service not available from any other Mexican bank. It counsels exporters and importers, and acts as intermediary for them, in carrying out buy/sell operations in futures, for merchandise quoted on foreign exchanges. These are goods usually involved in Mexican foreign trade operations, and include form products, textile fibers, minerals and petroleum. While overcoming its present economic difficulties, Mexico has been able to orient its development model toward the world market in order to achieve stable growth in the long term. Banco Nacional de Mexico is actively involved in this effort.

The Fed's Goal: Alleviating the Angst It Acts to Shore Up Dollar, Reassure Banks and Brokers

By Michael Quint New York Times Service

NEW YORK - The Federal Reserve, in its role as guardian of the nation's financial system, has emerged as the first arm of government to respond actively to the steep drop in the stock market.

While Congress and the Securities and Exchange Commission bave begun inquiries into the cause of the market decline and President Ronald Reagan has suggested a willingness to compromise to cut the budget deficit, the Fed has acted both openly and behind the scenes to soothe the nerves of financiers and prevent 2 full-fledged

On Wednesday, for example, the Fed bought dollars in the foreignexchange market to prevent a rapid decline in the value of the currency.

It has also stepped in earlier than oormal in recent days to buy Treasury securities temporarily, thereby adding cash reserves to the linancial system. On Tuesday, it even announced a day in advance its intention to supply reserves.

"The Fed has oo obligation to protect stock market profits — that is pot its job, said Richard Hoey. chief economist at Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. "But it does have an obligation to limit the secondary effects of a decline in stock prices."

To reduce the impact of those declines on the financial system, the Fed has adopted a two-pronged approach to assure bankers, companies and the public that there is oo need to panic and curtail their on loans to some firms, and a surge regular business activities. A stop in their loans to credit-worthy secuin the oormal flow of borrowing rities dealers, by cutting back on and lending brought oo by the lending to other sectors of the econ-Many analysts have said that the the value of the dollar or prevent autocratic, sometimes abrasive Mr. the passage of tough protectionist Delors is frustrated by the EC's legislation by the U.S. Congress, or failure to solve its financial probing its "readiness to serve as a source of liquidity to support the economic and financial system." To supplement that statement. the Federal Reserve Bank of New York met last week with executives of leading New York banks, urging them to lend to securities firms that are credit-worthy but that have suffered a temporary cash shortage during the market downturn. Without these steps to encourage the financial community, the Fed would run the risk that banks might worsen the situation on Wall Street by denying loans to credit-worthy securities firms whose borrowing needs are only temporary. Or worse yet, banks might respond to losses

On the one hand, the Fed has management has been its encourassured banks and securities firms agement of a modest decline in that money will be made available interest rates on overnight loans 10 carry them over short-term among banks. These rates have desqueezes brought on by the turmoil clined to about 6.625 percent Wednesday, down from an average The first public sign of the Fed's of 7 percent between Oct. 20 and Oct. 27 and about 7.5 percent to the four weeks before Oct. 20.

Although the decline is much less than the drop in other short-term rates, it is seen in the market as a clear sign of Fed policy, relieving the fears of higher interest rates that prevailed earlier this month.

"I think the Fed's strategy is clear — the only questions are about tactics and how it will orchestrate an easier monetary poliev," said Dana B. Johnson, a financial economist at the First National Bank of Chicago. The Fed will try to be as stimulative as it can, but it has to beware of the risk of a free-fall in the dollar and the thinking of people in the markets who still seem to worry about ງຄົດໃນເກັດແ

Mr. Hoey of Drexel Burnham said that during periods of turmoil. when the demand for safe, liquid securides like Treasury bills is ex-ceptionally strong, the Fed has no choice but to provide liquidity and stabilize the markets.

Some analysis are coocerned that the Fed is doing too little in response to the downturn in stocks.

"The Fed is following the market, not leading the way to a much more aggressive lowering of interest rates," said Roger A. Craig, a manager of the fixed-income portfolio at the Banc One Asset Management Corp. in Columbus, Ohio. The downturn in the economy is oing to be much more severe than ie Fed seems to expect."

They were North-South on the diagramed deal and arrived in the good contract of six clubs in the face of very weak twobid from West. The three-heart bid was a transfer, promising length in spades and virtually forcing North to bid that suit. The remaining bidding was natural, and ended with a

an American Art Collector. By Howard Greenfeld. Viking Inc., 40 West 23d Street, New York, N. Y. 10010.

Albert C. Barnes of Philadelphia was one of the foremost art collectors of his time. He began acquiring Cézannes, Matisses and Picas-sos long before the artists had won general acceptance, and by the time he died in 1951, he had amassed a collection containing hundreds of outstanding works — principally Impres-sionists and Post-Impressionists (there were some 200 Renoirs alone), but also Old Masters.

about his collecting quietly. Much of his interest lies in the fact that he was also notoriously quarrelsome, perverse and dictatorial. Along with his treasures, he left behind a sulfurous repotation—hence the title of Howard Green-feld's new biography. "The Devil and Dr.

Barnes's parents were poor but he fought his way to medical school and went on to set up a pharmaceutical firm. Most of his money came from a hugely popular antiseptic called Argyrol. After quarreing with his partner and buying him out, Barnes concentrated on running the business on paternalistic lines, with educational schemes for the staff based on the writings of William James, his intellectual hero; but before long he was looking for new worlds

His thoughts turned to art, and to a former classmate at high school who had been amiably unenthusiastic about his own early attempts to paint - William Glackens, by now a well-known artist. In 1912, he sent Glackens to Paris with $20,000 to spend on paintings, and though it took a little time for his taste to catch up with the pictures (mostly Post-Impressionists) that Glackens brought back, later that year he set out on an expedition to Paris himself. He was never again to make use of an intermediary, Greenfeld gives an amusing and well-balanced account of Barnes's idiosyncratic ways as a collector. (John Gross, NYT)

THE TENTH JUSTICE: The Solicitor Gener-

Supreme Court, but he is not just another lawyer. He is the only U.S. public official who must be "learned in the law" — not even Supreme Court justices face that requirement — and he has the unique responsibility of representing one branch of government while guiding another. Historically, the justices of the Supreme Court have looked to the solicitor general to help lead them through legal thickers to ensure that the nation ends up with the right result. A score or more times each year, the result. A score or more times each year, the court will ask the solicitor general to submit a brief in a case the government isn't even a party to; the court simply wants his opinion on vexing or sensitive issues.

The United States wins its case whenever paintings by his American contemporaries, examples of Oriental and ancient Egyptian art and African sculpture.

It seems unlikely, however, that he would have had a full-length book devoted to him nearly 40 years later if he had simply gome about his collecting onieth. Much of his intersection of the second statement of the second secon ine United States with its case whenever justice is done one of its citizens in the courts." Solicitor General Frederick Lehmann (1910-12) said, and that became the motto of the Justice Department. It is carved into the rotun-

Justice Department. It is carved into the rounda of the attorney general's office.

But the present attorney general, Edwin Meese, apparently doesn't look up at the motto very often. For he, his boss Ronald Reagan and his aide William Bradford Reynolds, according to Lincoln Caplan, have conspired to reduce the office of solicitor general to that of administration mountiniece — to try to pressive for the Reagan social and political agenda, an agenda that puts the limiting of rights above

All of this is laid out clearly, calmly and persuasively in Lincoln Caplan's brief-like book. Caplan, a Harvard Law School graduate, has written his brief with the precision of a lawyer and the clarity of a biographer.

VISIONS AND VOICES. By Jonathan Cott. Dolphin/Doubleday, 245 Park Avenue, New York, N. Y. 10167.

York, N. Y. 10167.

Here are 10 interviews with some of the most original and creative figures of our time; but interviews that are as far removed from the superficialities of the television celebrity chatshow as it is possible to get. Jonathan Cott's range is amazing. He is not only a sympathetic interviewer who can identify with his subjects and get the best out of them, but a highly cultured individual, as much at ease discussing musical composition with Pierre Boulez, as he is exchanging thoughts on ballet with George is exchanging thoughts on ballet with George Balanchine, on theater with Peter Brook, or on modern poetry with Carolyn Forché.

The interview that the choreographer Balanchine gave in 1982 was to be his last. Born in 1904, he died in a New York Hospital in 1983. His total single-mindedness is superbly conveyed. To be Balanchine at 78 was evidently marvelous. "You see, all I am is a dancer. I don't care about my past. . . To me, today is everything. . . You can ask a horse why he's a horse, but he just lives a horse's life. . . Horses don't talk, they just Cott is particularly good at tapping the springs of creativity in others. Federico Fellini reveals that he regards the process of creativity as "a kind of sickness or illness, You're invaded by a germ, something that has to grow inside you and that makes you completely sick; and the therapy is to materialize the germ of the

Bill Russell Seizes New NBA Challenge

Former Celtics Star and Coach Is Aiming to Build Contender in Sacramento

By Leonard Koppett New York Times Service SACRAMENTO, California — William Felton Russell, at the age of 53 has embarked on a new phase of an already historic career. He is nead coach of the Sacramento Kings, and he is on course to be-rome president of the club.

It has been 10 years since Bill
Russell last worked in the NBA, the league whose status he did so much westablish playing for the Boston Celties in the 1950s and 1960s. His Comes in the 1990s and 1900s. His four-year stint as coach of the Seat-tle SuperSonics ended in 1977.
Young basketball fans may think of him only as a commentator on network and cable basketball tele-casts and a Hall of Famer who casts and a Hall of Famer who belongs to the distant past. But the fragitude of Russell's feats still defines the man, his present position cannot be understood without reference to his background and those accomplishments long ago.

And insensible from his record And inseparable from his record s his passionately private and indi-vidualistic personality. He has al-ways kept his distance from the news media, has refused to give autographs or make personal ap-rearances and has often been celled difficult and worse.

"But I've learned," he said recently, "that it is more important to inderstand than to be under-

So it is with emphasis oo what he has come to understand that he approaches his new job: building the Kings — who moved two years ago from Kansas City into a tem-jorary 10,000-seat arena amid high expansion-city enthusiasm — into a strong enough team to have longrunning success in a permanent 16,500-seat building that will be occupied next year.

A Russell will be coach for two years, possibly three, to develop the seam on the playing level. Then, he is to succeed Joe Axelson as president, acquiring a seat on the Na-rional Basketball Association's board of governors. His contract with the Kings is for seven years. Tm fortunate to join what is sheady a good organization that has demonstrated its capability," he said. "I've got two assistant coaches, Willis Reed and Jerry Reynolds, whose opinions I value and listen to, The four of us, in-length about how to proceed, and the first stage is the building of the

Reed and Reynolds have NBA coaching experience themselves, and Axelson has been one of the league's most experienced administrators for many years.

The organization is headed by Greg Luckenbill, who is managing general partner of a five-man ownership group.

The Kings, who started life in the NBA as the Rochester Royals, in turn became the Cincinnati Royals, the Kansas City-Omaha Kings, then the Kansas City Kings. By 1985, when its Kansas City owners were ready to give up, the team had failed to make the playoffs in 8 of its 13 seasons there. Luckenbill brought the franchise to California, getting corporate sponsorship for the Arco Arena, while construction of the permanent arena proceeded. Axelson and Coach Phil Johnson came with the team, and the Kings did make the playoffs — with a losing record the first year. Last year, with Reyn-olds replacing Johnson in the mid-dle of the season, the team was 29-

As a college player, Russell led his University of San Francisco team to 55 straight victories and successive collegiate titles in 1955 and 1956. He then led the U.S. team to victory in the 1956 Olym-

Baseball Trade Under Investigation

CHICAGO (AP) - The baseball commissioner's office is reportedly investigating a trade that sent a pitcher from the Chicago Cubs to the ended.

The pitcher, Dickie Noles, was instrumental in helping the Tigers win the American League East title. The Chicago Tribune quoted an aide to Commissioner Peter Ueberroth as saying the deal was under scrutiny, and as noting that "there is a prohibition against leading players to another organization."

Noles was traded to Detroit for a player to be named later, but the player was never named. The Tigers sent Noies back to the Cubs last week. He notched two saves as Detroit overtook Toronto for the title. Ueberroth's office must determine whether the trade was made with the intent to return Noles to the Cubs, the newspaper said.

Dodgers Name a Black to High Post

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Los Angeles Dodgers have named fromny Hawkins, a former professional basketball player and a sports announcer, as vice president for communications. He becomes the highest-ranking black in the history of the Dodger front office. Hawkins and two other vice presidents rank behind Peter O'Malley, the president, and Fred Claire, the executive vice president for baseball operations. Claire was elevated seven months ago when Al Campanis resigned after a controversy over his remarks about the reasons few black ubletes have become baseball managers or front office personnel. Hawkins said Wednesday that in two months of talks with O'Malley, "only once, in our first meeting, did we discuss the Al Campanis

Hawkins will oversee the Dodgers' publicity, public relations, group sales, special events and community services departments. He played 10 years in the National Basketball Association, through 1969.

NFL Owner Told to Pay $5.1 Million

BOSTON (AP) — A federal judge has ordered the owner of the New England Patriots, William H. Sullivan Jr., to pay $5.1 million to share-holders in the NFL team who claimed Sullivan persuaded them in 1976 to accept prices below the value of the stock.

Sullivan also was ordered by U.S. District Judge Walter Jay Skinner to pay interest of about $2 million and $1.8 million in legal costs. In 1976, Sullivan offered to buy out the 130,000 shares of nonvoting sock for $15 a share. Some stockholders said they would not sell at that size and two groups sued Sullivan in state courts. Those courts upheld the stockholders, finding that the stock should have been valued at $80. In the separate federal case, Skinner ruled Wednesday that 985 other chareholders who voted against a 1976 merger will receive $65 a share from Sullivan, while the 406 shareholders who voted for the merger will receive $80. Outstanding shares in the case amount to 41,583 shares. On Tuesday, Sullivan went before National Football League owners in Kanses City, Missouri, asking them to authorize a rule that would allow the Patriots to sell a 49 percent stake in the team in a public stock offening. Sullivan said that would raise enough money so his family would and have to sell the team. The family reportedly is $77 million in debt.

U.S. Team Leading in Japan Golf

KOBE, Japan (AP) — Andy Bean fired an eight-under-par 64 Thursday to the the course record and take a one-stroke first-round lead in the individual competition at the $464,000 U.S. Japan golf matches.

The une-man U.S. team, skippered by Hale Irwin, took a $39-552 lead four the least scores on over the Impanese under a formula that counts the eight best scores on Bean carded eight birdies on the 6,850-yard, par-72 Sport Shinko County Club course. Gary Hallberg shot a 65. Chris Perry and Bill Rogers, and Masahiro Kuramoto of Japan shared third place at 66.

For the Record

A British golfer, Robert Lee, tied the world record of 27 strokes for nine Roles Thursday on his way to posting an eight-under-par 61 in the first sound of the Portuguese Open at Estoril NEL owners will decide in March whether to play an exhibition game London's Wembley Stadium for the third straight year. The owners total to make the decision based on what teams make the playoffs. It

memally was reported that there would be no game next year. (AP)

Lee Paropean Community will launch its biennial Games in 1989, Lord himb, president of the European Parliament, announced Thursday in Strasbourg, France. Each of the 12 EC countries will organize two sports. in two separate cities, between April 21 and May 1, 1989.

Quotable

Win Chamberlain, 51, at the suggestion that he could still make imperior of some current National Basketball Association centers:

Celtics won nine titles in 10 years, signed, it had a solid base of 5,000 giving professional basketball a season tickets sold and the material level of prestige it had not enjoyed to reach the NBA championship

In the process, Russell revolu-tionized the game. He was a 6-foot-9-inch (2.06-meter) center whose lightning reflexes brought shot-right situations where their talent blocking and other detensive maneuvers that trigger a fast-break offense into full development.

In 1966, after eight straight titles, Auerbach retired as coach and named Russell as his successor. This was hailed as a sociological advance, since Russell was the first black man to be made coach of a major-league team in any sport, let alone so distinguished a team. But neither Russell nor Anerbach saw the move that way. They felt it was simply the best way to keep win-ning, and as a player-coach, Russell won two more titles in the next

Then, he retired from basketball, his place in us history secure, and moved into broader spheres, host-ing radio and television talk shows and writing newspaper columns on general topics.

Baseball Should Try for Right Call Every Time

New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Ever since the first umpire nissed a call, baseball's cop-out has been that bad calls even up, that each team will get its share. Over a 162-game season, maybe the bad calls do even up, maybe not. But in the World Series, especially in the seventh game, there's not enough time for them to even up. In the seventh game, the outcome can turn on a bad call that could be corrected if baseball would accept limited instant replay.

Commissioner Peter Ueberroth keeps say ing that baseball doesn't want to take the "human element" out of umpiring. The human element is really a synonym for the occasional missed call. To the commissioner, the human element is apparently more important than the correct call. Or the correct World Series winner.

With one out in the top of the sixth inning of Sunday night's seventh game, Lee Weyer called Tommy Herr of the Cardinals out at before Viola, backing up the rundown, tagged him. After the Twins' 1-2 victory, Weyer character that the replay clearly showed that Herr had escaped the rundown and returned to the bag before Viola, backing up the rundown, tagged him. After the Twins' 4-2 victory, Weyer colonested and the bag before violation and the rundown tagged him. acknowledged that he had been "blocked out of the play" by Kent Hrbek, the Twins' first baseman, adding that the replay showed it was "very, very close."

VANTAGE POINT/Dave Anderson

But by Tuesday, in a television interview, Weyer acknowledged that he had missed the call. This time, the 51-year-old umpire, one of the most respected in the National League, added, "I thought he would be out."

But umpires aren't supposed to anticipate the call. They're supposed to know. And if they don't know, they're supposed to ask the opinion of another umpire who might have had a better view of the play. In this case, Dave Phillips, the home-plate umpire. But there was no umpires' conference.

Anybody who was watching television knew that Weyer had missed the call. Herr was clearly safe. In another replay, Don Baylor of the Twins had clearly been safe, not out, at the plate on a call by Phillips in the second inning. Not quite so clear was a play at first base in the fifth when Weyer called Greg Gagne of the Twins safe. The replay appeared to show that Joe Magrane's red shoe had slightly depressed the bag ahead of Gagne's black shoe.

Maybe the Twins would have won anyway.
Maybe not. But those three calls, two in the Twins' favor, surely affected the flow of the seventh game. And all three calls could have been corrected if baseball used instant replay.

This is not to say that baseball should use instant replay or an electronic zone to call balls and strikes; that's too subjective. And this is not to say that baseball should use instant replay over the entire 162-game season. But in the World Series, in the two league championship series and in late September games involving teams in the divisional races.

instant replay should be used.

Two years ago, the Cardinals were within three outs of winning the World Series, leading by 1-0 in the sixth game. Bot then Don Denkinger, the first-base umpire, ruled the Royals' leadoff batter. Jorge Orta, safe on a toss from Jack Clark, the Cardinals' first baseman, to Todd Worrell. The Royals rallied for a 2-1 victory, then routed the Cardi-oals, 11-0, in the seventh game.

"I was assure enough to realize," Denkinger said after viewing the replay, "that the man was clearly out. The call was wrong." But the call stood. The flow of the game was affected.

In the National Football League, which uses limited instant replay in 14 games every weekend, some plays remain inconclusive, as they would in baseball. But of the 374 plays that the NFL reviewed during the 1986 seasoo and playoffs, 38 were reversed, or 10

30 Compete For Golf's Biggest Purse

By Gordon S. White Jr. New York Times Service SAN ANTONIO, Texas -

While the real world wonders if its financial house is made of cards, the world of golf will reach a finan-cial high this week as 30 golfers compete for a share of a $3 million

The purse, the largest in the his-tory of the game, is being offered at the first Nabisco Golf Championship. It was starting Thursday at the Oak Hills Country Clob, as the conclusion to the year's PGA Tour. The man who shoots the best score over the 72 holes will take home at least $360,000, the largest victory prize ever offered oo the tour. The 30th-place golfer will win $32,000. If the winner is Curtis Strange, he will take away $535,000, including a bonus of $175,000 based on his yearlong play.

The $3 million purse here is made up of $2 million for the tour-nament and another $1 million in bonus prizes based on how a player finished the year in points awarded by the sponsoring company. The bonus money has caused debate. A number of the players, such as Greg Norman, do not think the bonus money should be counted as official money on the tour. Strange, the leading money winner with three victories and a record $718,941 in winnings, can set a mark of $1,253,941 for the year.

"To take the bonus money as official money upsets the men who perform well on the course," Norman said. "I hope Curtis finishes on top of the money list. He deserves it. But someone else could beat him with the right amount of bonus money here."

Norman set the previous year-long record of $653,296 in 1986. The point system used all year that ends with this tournament was basically 200 points for a victory, 100 for second place and then on down a scale to 10 points for 25th place. Strange has 3,120 points while Paul Azinger, second on the money list, is also second in points with 2,717 points.

Others who made it here include Ben Crenshaw, Tom Kite, Tom Watson, Fred Couples, Bernhard Langer, Payne Stewart, Scott Hoch and Mac O'Grady.

In Atatürk's Shadow

By Alan Cowell New York Times Service A NKARA — With the reverence reserved for those who have molded destiny. Turks have paid homage for decades at a stern and towering mansoleum that is as much a national shrine as Lemin's tomb in Moscow.

Over the years the footfalls of pilgrims too many to count have worn the steps that lead to the tomb of Mustafa Kemal Atatürk. This year, for the first time since its opening in 1953, the mausoleum underwent renovation, and great slabs of stone were replaced and

The mystique and mythology that enfold the memory of Atathrk, who died 49 years ago, persist in a manner that some foreigners find surprising. Most Turks deem it quite natural to show respect to a leader who defied foreign occupa-tion and invasion by Greece after World War I, and who offered an ideological vision of secularism and Western-oriented democracy that still flourishes.

On most days, the geometric sweep of the mausoleum draws vis-itors, many of them clad in the manner of Anatolian peasants, who come to see not only the tomb but also, in a museum, the minutiae that define what is depicted as

Here, in a glass case, is his toilet kit; here, his top hat and tuxedo, his general's uniform, his rowing machine. There are gifts, too, from the potentates who ruled Iran and Afghanistan and a selection of his walking sticks, one disguising the breech, barrel and trigger mechanism of a rifle.

Guarding Atatürk's mausoleum are soldiers, though not enough to prevent fires in the summer that were attributed by some to the beat and by others to arsonists.

The military shield does not protect the Ataturk shrine from another of Ankara's ills. While the theory is stoutly denied by the custodians, some Westerners say the shrine's light brown stonework may be imperiled by the city's pollution.

As the seasons turn, the sky takes on the brownish-yellowish tinge of soiled air, caused by bad coal and too many automobiles, trapped in a windless bowl of other hills.

Compared with a decade ago, Ankara bas changed, Modest stretches of the main thoroughfare, Atatürk Boulevard, are lined with glittery clothing stores boasting Turkish and foreign names. Some greenery, too, has managed 10 nudge its way into Ankara's dull monochromes. The shops stock imported whiskey and cigarettes, once under-thecounter rarities.

The reason is that, since 1980, the style of the economy has been turned around. Once, a Western economic specialist said, Turkey ranked second only to China in the dubious league of the world's most closed economies.
Since 1980, however, Prime Minister Turget Ozal has brought about much change. Exports encouraged by a devaluation have blossomed from $2 billion of mainly agricul-tural produce a year to $10 billion a year, more than half of it carned by manufactured goods like clothing

W HAT some call Ozal's economic revolution has carried another price tag, however, in this land of 55 million people, a population that is growing at a brisk pace of 2.3 percent a year. The foreign debt has almost doubled, to $34 billion, since 1980, and the country spends two-fifths of its foreign exchange earnings to meet its debt obligations. Inflation is estimated anywhere from 35 to 50 percent.

By the standards of the European Community, which it is seeking to join, Turkey's per capita income is low: $1,250 a year. The economy needs to grow to keep pace with the population, the Western specialist said, but at its present pace it is overheating. It expanded by 8 per-

"Ozal will have to put on the brakes" after the general election, scheduled for Nov. 29, the specialist said. That will probably mean less spending by the government on such big investment programs as road-building and electrification

Ozal, according to opinion sur-veys, remains the most popular polincian in the country, and a majority of Turks favor an election to cement his power, But, some suggest, they may not he prepared for what is coming.

"A lot of Turks don't realize what's going to happen after an election," a Western diplomat said. "Winter might be a little harder than they are expecting.

Cher: What's Hidden Under the Glitz?

By Stephanie Mansfield
Washington Past Service
NEW YORK — Cher breezes through the botel door, wearing a silky black jacket over an "Invasion of the Elvis Zombies" T-shirt, ber buge almond eyes peeking through an oversized tangled mop of inky-black Rastafarian kink, her porcelain skin dusted with flour and her lips a pale lavender.

The embalmed look. Her face has the bored, blank stare of a heavy-metal prom queen. Somebody who, at 41, bas been publicly and privately cool, not to mention byperfamous, for more than two decades. It's the same look she used to give Sonny, her ex-busband, when she put him down on their television show every week.

But if you think you know Cher, you don't. Sure, there's the nose job. And the tattoos. And the younger men who came and went with the regularity of summer colds. Addicted to excess, she gave "tacky" new meaning. But the glitzy, trash 'n' flash TV Cher is merely an invention. Scratch the surface and you find a thoughtful, rather shy artist. And with her latest film, "Suspect," she has shown once again that while she still may be a cartoon, she is also a gifted actress.

For now, though, she is a concerned mother. Her 11-year-old son, Elijah Blue, has a fever. She walks through the lobby with her arm draped about his neck. He stares up at her adoringly. He is cerily iscent of his father, the equally hip rock keyboardist Gregg Allman, who was married to Cher for about five minutes

"Why is this so red? Did you have an earning in here?" Cher is stroking Elijah's cheek and examining his right_earlobe. "Yes," Elijah answers. "Did you clean it?"

The two are talking softly while the ele-vator ascends. Cher keeps fingering the infected earlobe as any suburban mother would examine her son's latest boo-boo.

"You have to clean it, honey." The elevator stops. The group moves toward the penthouse suite she's rented ther Manhattan apartment is being renovated) and she takes Elijah aside. They talk for a minute, then Cher says laughingly, "What is your hair anyway?" She ruffles the blond locks. "It's not spiked, it's not

Another film — "Moonstruck," directed by Norman Jewison — will open next month. In it, Cher plays a dowdy, graybaired Brooklyn accountant. Yes, she says, people are still surprised

"People take you more by the way you look, still, than by even the products you put ont. I don't think you can stay popular, forever, as long as I have, and not have to finally come up with some kind of talent." She leans forward. "People call me a 'serious actress.' I don't like the words serious actress,' but I am serious about my acting and I'm serious about my work. I don't take myself so seriously I can't laugh at myself. Some people I've met, not the coolest people or the most talented, take themselves so seriously it's really ridiculous. All I do is just a job. It's a cool job, granted, but it's just a job." The biggest misconception about her, she says, is "that people take the dichotomies about me and believe both of them at the same time. That I'm really superficial and flighty, or that I'm really broody and moody." Actually, she says, her real persona "falls on both of those areas and also a lot in between.

Does she like being famous?

The negative part of her image, she thinks, grows from her restlessness. She has never stayed the same for very long. "I get really bored easily. And also, I don't remember where f ever read that people can't

With their bell-bottoms and boots, their wisecracking, world-weary demeanor and their daughter named Chastity, they became a sort of hip '60s American

"He was real childish. We got along great," she says. But the relationship soured as Cher began to mature. "He wasn't interested in me growing older. He was interested in me staying exactly the same. So the more I tried to become me, the less he liked it and the more controlling he tried to be."

After 10 years, they are scheduled to be reunited for the first time on "Late Night With David Letterman" next month. "It was my idea," says Cher. "Knowing Sonny's sense of humor, he'll think it's a great idea too." They will not, however, do any singing.

Sonny, a restaurant owner, is running for mayor of Palm Springs, California. He and Cher don't talk, though "we're really not enemies." He's just kind of mad "because I've said negative things about him in the press. I said positive things for so long, I just got tired of it. "It's like Gregory," she says, referring to her second husband. "At one time I was really in love with him and I realized it was a huge mistake on my part. It wasn't his fault. Anyone with a brain could have seen that. With Sonny, I was crazy about him when I met him. We were great friends. I don't think we should have been married. We were such good working partners, and yet the work and the marriage got so entangled that even when one wasn't good, we could go out and he great together because we had a really great time working."

Her exploits were much reported: the closets full of bugle-beaded gowns, the shoe collection to rival Imelda Marcos's, the neon sign that blinked CHER — CHER — CHER over the fireplace of her 31-room Tudor mansion. At the time of the split, Sonny was quoted as saying, "I lost it all."

Cher once told Rolling Stone magazine that men are luxuries. "You can have poundcake or you can have chocolate mousse pie. They're both desserts, but one is so much more fun."

"I really feel that way," she says now. "I don't dislike them. I'm really crazy about them. I just don't think you need a man to
